Ruse to Conceal Auto Trip Fails

Chauffeur Is Recognized as Edward's; Ipswich Hotels Are Filled.

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 20.—The towering 200-pound detective who is King Edward's personal bodyguard has been assigned to watch Mrs. Wallis Simpson, the monarch's American-born friend.

He is Chief Inspector David Storier, of Scotland Yard. His assignment is to shield the former Baltimore debutante pending hearing of her divorce suit against her shipping broker husband.

Every time Mrs. Simpson leaves her New Cumberland Terrace residence in the fashionable Mayfair district until she is safe inside again, Storier hovers close by.

The first evidence that the vivacious American woman was enjoying royal protection while Edward was away grouse hunting at Sandringham was disclosed today when she visited a fashionable Dover street hairdresser.

Apparently suspecting that the front of her home was being watched, Storier superintended the "planting" of her automobile on the grounds at the rear so she could leave without being seen.

Ruse Proves Failure.

But the ruse failed.

Not until Mrs. Simpson emerged from the beauty parlor after an hour-and-forty-minute treatment, evidently, did the detective realize his strategy had not worked.

Mrs. Simpson, obviously flustered, leaped into the car and her chauffeur whisked her to a bank several blocks away.

She stayed inside and her chauffeur departed. A few minutes later Storier appeared looking as dark as two thunderclouds and cleared the sidewalk until Mrs. Simpson could dash into a taxi.

Meanwhile the leading hotel in Ipswich tonight was booked full for Saturday, the day on which Mr. Justice Hawke is expected to hear Mrs. Simpson's divorce suit. The second best hotel in town had only two rooms available for that date.

Hoeppel and Son Ordered by Court To Face Sentence

Their last avenue of escape closed to them when the United States Supreme Court refused to grant a rehearing of their appeal, Representative John H. Hoeppel, of California, and his son, Charles J. Hoeppel, yesterday learned that, acting with unusual dispatch, the Supreme Court had forwarded to the lower courts the mandate ordering the imposition of sentence.

Both father and son are under sentence of from four months to two years. They have been at liberty on bond since their conviction here almost a year ago.

The high court mandate reached the United States Court of Appeals yesterday and was immediately forwarded to District Court for execution. Officials of the latter court yesterday stated that the Representative and his son would be given several days to appear for formal imposition of sentence.

To Reopen Fights.

Arcadia, Calif., Oct. 20 (AP).—Representative John H. Hoeppel said tonight he had a new avenue of fight against his conviction and sentence to jail on charges of conspiring to sell a West Point appointment, but that he would "return to Washington immediately whenever it becomes necessary."

Representative Hoeppel said Attorney Jesse C. Duke had opened the way today for a further fight against the convictions. Duke, he said, filed with the Supreme Court a brief in intervention in the Wood case pending there, challenging the constitutionality of the jury. The Wood case, Representative Hoeppel said, involves points similar to that of him and his son.

Low-Rent Alley Homes Dedicated As Tribute Is Paid to Mrs. Hopkins

In the shadows of her life, Aunt Minnie Henson 68, sat by the side of her door in London Court yesterday and saw fulfilled the golden dreams of a "Lady Bountiful" who told her years ago the time would come when poor colored folks could live in nice homes instead of alley slums.

By James J. Cullinane.

Simple tribute to the memory of Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Washington's "Lady Bountiful," who devoted her life to reclaiming the city's slums, was paid down by the gas works yesterday by the people who knew her best.

In the bright sunshine of a warm autumn day humble colored folk, Government officials, philanthropists and social workers stood shoulder to shoulder in London Court southeast to dedicate a bright little community of 23 gleaming white houses as Charlotte Everett Hopkins place.

The dedication marked the opening of the District Alley Dwelling Authority's first low-rent homes and the culmination of a dream for which Mrs. Hopkins fought until her death at the age of 84 in September, 1935.

It was to Mrs. Hopkins that President Roosevelt handed the pen with which he signed the Alley Dwelling Authority act in 1934 and yesterday Mrs. Roosevelt telegraphed that she was "terribly sorry" she could not attend the dedication of Hopkins place.

"I feel Mrs. Hopkins should get all the credit we can bring to her memory," wired Mrs. Roosevelt.

There were tears in the eyes of Mrs. Hopkins' friends as her daughter told how she consecrated her life when she was only 14 years old—just after the Civil War—to improving the lot of the humble colored folks who were herded into unspeakable hovels in Washington's hidden alleys.

"Mother used to say," related Mrs. Henry G. Patterson, "that if she had her choice between heaven and Washington she would choose Washington as long as it tolerated its alley slums."

Mrs. Patterson related how her mother persuaded Cabinet officers, Senators, bankers—anyone who might help—to follow her into the slums to observe conditions. No one was too important or too busy to resist her pleadings. But the years passed by and men once powerful sank into obscurity. Mrs. Hopkins, undaunted, found new allies. To her aid in 1934 came The Washington Post with a series of articles which aroused public opinion and sent

Madrid Arms Citizens to Go To War Front

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Oct. 20.—Lashed to martial fury by the exhortations of their womenfolk, Madrid's civilian workers marched to war tonight.

Laborers, factory workers in overalls, desk workers with ink-stained fingers—all poured from their buildings in answer to the pleas of frenzied women.

Clumsily but effectively they fell in with units of the regular militia marching off to battle the enemy whose cannonading could be heard plainly in the streets of Madrid.

Hands that had never held anything more lethal than a saw or a pen clutched cold rifles shoved at them by women, shouting themselves hoarse in the war hysteria which rolled over the once drowsy Spanish city.

The mutter of a city at work rose to a roar today as a sudden swift wind rolled the reverberations of artillery into the heart of the government capital.

A city accustomed to read daily reports of the valiant fight of its forces against the insurgents suddenly awoke to the realization that the enemy was almost at the gates.

The women were the first to hear and recognize the ominous sounds. Through the market places they swarmed.

"Come out!" they shouted. "Come out and fight for Spain."

Desks and benches were deserted as men, old and young, fit and infirm, stampeded from buildings and took up rifles.

The military leaders within the city were quick to realize the situation—one which it would have been difficult for them to control had they wished.

Hastily the leaders cast about for conveyances to rush the wild civilian army to the battle lines and throw them against the attackers before their frenzy had had time to cool.

Amy Mollison, Husband Agree On Separation

Woman Flier Will Continue Air Exploits Under Maiden Name.

By the Associated Press.

Chelsfield, England, Oct. 20.—Mrs. Amy Mollison, woman flier, tonight said she and her husband Jim, had decided soloing is the best marital course for each of them.

Mrs. Mollison, holder of long-distance flight records, made her statement after a forced landing here had wrecked her plane and broken her nose.

"I have for the past month heard rumors about Jim and my friendship," she said. "Jim is going his way and I am going mine and I shall fly under my own name as Amy Johnson."

Her husband, she said, was in America.

Amy Johnson was married to James A. Mollison in London July 29, 1932. Each is a noted long-distance flyer.

Mrs. Mollison on December 18, 1932, wrested the England-Cape Town speed record from her husband, completing the flight in 4 days, 6 hours and 55 minutes.

This record was eclipsed by Jean Batten in May, 1934, but May 16 of this year Mrs. Mollison regained it, adding three new records to her log book.

She set a record each way for solo flights between Cape Town and London and established a record for the round trip, which she completed in a flying time of 7 days 22 hours and 43 minutes.

Alleged Spy Arrested.

Perpignan, France, Oct. 20 (AP).—A German citizen, Charles Friederich Genley, today was reported arrested in Catalonia on a charge of espionage and taken to Madrid for trial.

Consumers Hit Price Increase At Milk Hearing

Shortage Is Predicted by Producers If Demand Is Not Granted.

A threatened rise in local milk prices brought a storm of protests from consumer representatives at hearings before AAA officials yesterday, as producers in nearby Maryland and Virginia warned of a dangerous shortage in the commodity unless increased price demands are met.

B. B. Derrick, secretary of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association and spokesman for 1,100 dairymen serving the District market, told the meeting that only two more cows are producing milk for Washington this year than there were in 1935.

"The present price of milk is not adequate to bring forth an increased supply to meet the growing demand," Derrick said. "Hardly enough milk has been produced since October 10 to satisfy Washington's fluid milk and fluid cream needs and the consumption trend is upwards."

He pointed out that Washington's metropolitan population is 22 per cent over what it was in 1930 and the production of milk has increased only 8.4 per cent since that year.

The meeting was called to consider amendments to the recent Washington milk marketing agreement and order. Derrick told AAA officials that the only hope for increasing the supply was a 47-cent per hundredweight increase in the minimum prices set by the marketing agreement.

From a present minimum of $3.02 from class 1 milk, producers are seeking an increase to $3.49, and for class 2, from $2.82 to $3.29.

These price changes amount to 4 cents a gallon, an increase of 1 cent a quart in the amount paid out by the distributor. It has been threatened, if the boost is granted, to pass the increase along to the consumer and raise retail milk prices.

AAA Benefits For 15 States Ready to Mail

Checks to Go Forward Tomorrow or Friday Include Kansas.

G. O. P. Charge WPA Loans Are Used for Political Purposes.

By Robert C. Albright.

The first block of AAA farm benefit checks, 1936 edition, is now clearing the general accounting office and will be mailed to farmers in 15 or more States beginning tomorrow or Friday, it was learned last night.

A small shower of the checks will fall in each agricultural region, with Kansas, home State of the Republican Presidential candidate, slated to be in the first batch.

Some $9,000,000, or less than 2 per cent of the $470,000,000 appropriated by Congress to finance the new soil conservation act, is expected to move into the mails by the end of the month. Payments will be made as rapidly as possible, but due to the amount of work involved, several weeks will elapse before they can go out in volume, officials said. About 6,000,000 "farmers," owners as well as tenants, ultimately will receive benefits, a greater number than in any of the old AAA programs.

As the farm benefit payments moved through the Comptroller General's office, the Republican national Congressional committee charged in a statement that PWA grants now are being increased in politically border-line territory "in a palpable effort to swing into the Roosevelt column the present so-called doubtful States."

Gives Compilation.

The committee offered a compilation of PWA grants between September 8 and October 10, and commented:

"It shows not only an increase where the New Deal figures an increase might be politically beneficial, but it shows that most of the increase is going to so-called doubtful States, States that not even the most optimistic of New Deal forecasters can say are for Mr. Roosevelt's continuance in office."

This followed similar charges directed at AAA benefit payments Sunday by Representative Robert L. Bacon (Republican), of New York, who claimed farm benefit payments are being increased in doubtful or unfavorable States as the election approaches. This drew an immediate retort from J. B. Hutson, acting AAA administrtaor. Hutson said Bacon was "misinformed." He said no checks had as yet been mailed.

Yesterday Hutson disclosed the names of a dozen States which, he said, will be among the first 15 to receive benefit payments started into the mails tomorrow or Friday. These included Kansas and North Dakota, in the Western region; Illinois and Iowa, in the North Central region; Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Maine and Vermont, in the Northeast region; Tennessee, in the East Central region, and Mississippi, in the Southern region.

Farmer participation in the new program is greater than for any one year under the old AAA program. Officials pointed out that checks consequently will be smaller and spread farther. Only $470,000,000 is available for soil conservation, against more than $500,000,000 for the last AAA program.

Late Crops Handicap.

The increase in participation by New England farmers is especially marked, and this section will get several times the volume of checks it formerly received. Participation in the whole Northeast has been roughly estimated at about 50 per cent of the 500,000 farms between Pennsylvania and Maine. Less than 7 per cent participated in old AAA programs. At least five States in this area will be among the first receiving the new checks.

The AAA hoped to include more States in the drought area in its initial payments, as a relief measure, but late Western crops and mechanical difficulties hindered this effort.

Officials said initial payments of 90 per cent would be made to farmers in the North Central, Western and East Central regions. Farmers

Broken Thigh Bone Is Nailed in Place In New Operation

Philadelphia, Oct. 20. (AP).—A new operation in which two broken parts of the thigh bone near the hip socket are nailed together to promote quick healing, was described today to the American College of Surgeons.

The operation, appearing drastic in nautre, but regarded by surgeons as quicker and easier than use of a plaster cast, was reported by Dr. M. N. Smith-Petersen, of Massachusteets General Hospital Boston.

As a result of the operation, patients with such fractures of the femur, or thigh bone, have been dismissed from the hospital and sent back to work in from four of five weeks.

The insertion of the nail was reported as a comparatively simple procedure. An incision is made over the hip joint and the upper end of the femur exposed. A thin wire is then driven lengthwise through the broken parts to act as a guide for the nail. The nail itself, which is of rustless steeel about 3 inches long with flanged edges giving it great strength, is then driven in to join the broken parts.

Landon Assails 'Abuses' Of Power; Ickes Reveals Kansan Asked Gas Loan

U. S. Fund to Build Pipe Line Sought in 1935, Secretary Avers.

Declares Governor Also Suggested States Own Phone Systems.

Charging Gov. Alf M. Landon with "insincerity," Secretary Ickes, in a radio speech last night, produced a letter written to him in 1935 by the Republican candidate suggesting Government loans to States for publicly operated telephone systems.

The Interior Secretary also described attempts by Landon to obtain Government money to finance a $35,000,000 gas pipe line project in his State which, Ickes said, would have taken half their business from private gas companies. He declared Landon, who he said was then a "state socialist," insisted that the pipe line negotiations be conducted with utmost secrecy.

The Ickes speech was broadcast throughout the country just before Landon began speaking on a similar radio hookup from Los Angeles.

In Los Angeles last night Gov. Landon issued a statement in reply, saying Ickes' attack was "typical of the confusion" in the New Deal and asserted "this attack is like the losing team throwing the ball around wildly attempting to score." He added, according to the Associated Press:

"Up to date the Administration's spokesmen have been attacking me on the ground that I was a puppet of big business. Now they attack me on the ground that I am a Socialist and the enemy of big business."

Authority Suggested.

The letter, referred to by Ickes, dated February 7, 1935, said:

"If you do not have the authority under the PWA to make loans to States for public State-wide telephone systems, may I suggest that it would be a sound public policy to obtain this authority."

Ickes insisted that this letter and the pipe-line project were in contradiction with Landon's stand for free enterprise. The Interior Secretary declared that Landon's record "is extraordinary, even if it is not wonderful."

"The trouble with the Republicans," he said, "is that they did not know how extradordinary that record really was. They took too much for granted. They did not scrutinize his record. If they had, they would never have nominated him for President, even if they had had to nominate as their standard-bearer that windmill-tilting gentleman of grotesque and absurd statements, Col. Frank Knox."

Ickes said that in December, 1934, Landon sent William Allen White, Kansas editor, to Washington to discuss the pipe-line proposal with him.

"Enjoining great secrecy because the Governor of Kansas did not want his colleagues in the oil business to get wind of it," Ickes continued, "Mr. White unfolded a plan by which Kansas, as a State enterprise, would build a pipe line to the natural gas fields in southwest Kansas and market that natural gas in competition with private industry. It also developed later that Gov. Landon did not propose to take the people of his State into his confidence until it was too late for them to block his ambitious plan. The cost of Mr. Landon's little pipe line dream would be $35,000,000."

Later, Ickes said, Landon came to Washington to discuss the plan.

Dummy Directors.

"The plan that Gov. Landon was at such pains to conceal from the citizens of his State involved the setting up of a private corporation, capitalized at $35,000,000, to go into the gas business in Kansas without permitting the people to have advance knowledge of his intention." Ickes continued. "He, as Governor, would dictate the policies of this corporation through dummy direc-

The Political Parade.

Gov. Landon, speaking at Los Angeles, charged the Administration is "undermining" individual liberty and "must be defeated" to save "our American form of government."

Secretary Ickes, on the other hand, declared over the radio that Landon, who he said was then a "State Socialist," sent him a letter last year favoring State-owned phone systems and proposed a PWA-backed gas distribution system for Kansas.

Secretary Hull, in a statement, charged Landon's Monday address "hopelessly misstates, confuses and jumbles the entire question pertaining to reciprocal trade policies and treaties."

Senator Vandenberg assailed interruption with his Saturday night radio speech because he was using the recorded voice of the President in an interview. He defended what he called "faithful presentation of the first-hand truth."

President Roosevelt departed for a campaign tour of New England to make a half-dozen addresses. He will speak tonight at Worcester, Mass.

John W. Davis, Democratic presidential nominee in 1924, said the New Deal administration "presents the most callous disregard of party principles, platform promises and personal pledges in history."

Both the Townsend pension organization and the Union Party issued statements severing relations with the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith on the grounds that he is forming a nationalistic organization.

New Deal Fails To Keep Faith, Davis Declares

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 20.—John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for President in 1924, said tonight in his first speech of the campaign that the record of the Roosevelt Administration "presents the most callous disregard of party principles, platform promises and personal pledges in all the history of American politics."

He did not mention the name of Gov. Alfred M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, but said the only course open to "a Democrat who still holds to the creed of Democratic liberalism" is to "stand up, speak up, and on election day take his judgment and his conscience with him into the polling place and make his protest good."

Speaking over a Nation-wide hook-up under auspices of the National Jeffersonian Democrats, Davis said it was impossible to reconcile the occurrences under the New Deal with any "platform the Democratic Party has ever adopted" or "with any previous conception of the American system of Government."

"It is clearly unfair to Socialists to describe the New Deal as Socialism," he continued, "in spite of the socialistic character of many of its policies and its borrowings from the Socialist platform. Socialism has a creed and a professed philosophy and a program to fit it.

"No Claim to Support."

"In spite of its advocacy of the redistribution of wealth, the New Deal is not communistic. Communists are not satisfied with half measures. In spite of its enormous strides toward centralization, I do not think the New Deal should be described as fascism.

"But whatever it is or is not, whatever it holds of good or bad, one thing is certain: the New Deal is not democratic as the Democratic Party has hitherto employed that Re-election Tantamount to Approval of Evils, Governor Asserts.

'Political' Relief Termed Shameful

He Criticizes the House Townsendite Inquiry by Implication.

Text of Gov. Landon's address—Page 30.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Oct. 21.—Gov. Alf M. Landon accused the New Deal of "undermining" individual liberty and "tampering" with basic democratic principles tonight in demanding that President Roosevelt be ousted in behalf of a "return to our Constitution."

Before an open-air audience in the huge Los Angeles Coliseum, the Presidential nominee reached the climax of his West Coast dash with an assertion that Mr. Roosevelt's re-election would be interpreted as in indorsement of policies Landon said had "abused" the power of government and threatened "our independence."

In this first major talk of his final campaign swing, the Kansan addressed a crowd, estimated at 75,000 by Capt. H. C. Brawster of the sheriff's office. The Coliseum seats 106,000

"If we are to preserve our American form of government," the Republican candidate said, "this Administration must be defeated."

The Kansan said Congressional investigations "have budded and blossomed in unusual and rank profusion" during the Roosevelt Administration. Some listeners interpreted his remarks as referring to the House investigation of Dr. F. E. Townsend's old-age pension movement, when the Governor said:

"Recently, a Congressional investigation has been carried on for what seems to be purely political ends. In this case the thinly veiled purpose apparently was to discredit a political movement which the controlling party wishes to crush."

Urges Landon Support.

Dr. Townsend has urged followers unable to vote for William Lemke, Union Party Presidential candidate, to support Landon.

Turning to New Deal relief spending, the nominee said:

"There is unmistakable evidence that these vast funds have been used to force Congressmen and Senators to support Administration measures.

"There is also unmistakable evidence that they have been used to prevent criticism by officials and representatives of local communities. There is unmistakable evidence that these funds have been used in an attempt to prevent freedom of choice at the polls.

"Nothing can be more shameful than the way some of these Federal funds have been distributed. Special groups and special localities have been singled out solely for political reasons. Relief funds have been used in an attempt to force our less fortunate fellow citizens to vote for the return of this Administration to power.

"The managers of relief have played favorites—they have developed two classes of relief, common and preferred."

Assails Spending Abuse.

Making the first major address of his final campaign drive for the Presidency, Landon said abuse of spending leads to abuse of the right to borrow and that "abuse of the right to borrow is the first step to inflation, and is a direct threat to all those who by thrift have accumulated savings."

Tht candidate contended many New Deal tax bills were designed, not to raise revenue, but "to force the nonconformer into line, to threaten him with destructive and punitive taxation."

Landon said that in resenting "any criticism," the Administration "actually attempted to bring the Supreme Court into disrepute" when the court "declared its methods unconstitutional."

"Even the President," he asserted, "joined in this shameful attack on men who were only doing their duty—men sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States. * * * Fortunately, the Supreme Court had the prestige and the integrity to withstand the abuses that were heaped upon it. But for the private citizen it was not so

Rotten Eggs Shower Browder; He Cancels Terre Haute Talk

By the Associated Press.

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 20.—Citizens blocked both front and rear entrances to radio station WBOW here tonight, hurled rotten eggs at Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President, and prevented him from entering the station to make a scheduled radio campaign speech.

At least one person was believed to have been cut in a fight at the foot of the inclosed stairway leading to the radio station. A man was seen with blood streaming from his back.

Browder returned to his hotel after he had been showered with the rotten eggs, then sent word he would not make any further attempt to give the speech tonight, but would take the matter up in the courts tomorrow.

Several hundred persons jammed around both front and rear stairways to the radio station an hour before the Communist candidate was scheduled to make his appearance. As Browder appeared the shower of rotten eggs began.

Several fights broke out in the crowd, and one photographer had his camera knocked from his hands. As he climbed to the top of an automobile to take a picture of the crowd there were shouts of "break up that camera," and the crowd surged around him.

Browder announced his intention to give up plans for the speech five minutes before he was scheduled to go on the air. One of his attorneys remained in the crowd at the radio station stairway attempting to gain an entrance to the building.

HullDenounces Landon Attack On Trade Pacts

Farm Income Is Increasing $1,000,000,000 a Year, Secretary Asserts.

Secretary Hull last night defended reciprocal trade agreements, pointed to increased prosperity of the American farmer, and declared that Gov. Alf M. Landon's New Mexico speech Monday "hopelessly misstates, confuses and jumbles the entire question."

Hull, in a statement, said Landon "makes empty repetition of charges which have been completely exploded by all official statistics."

In his speech, made at Albuquerque, Landon criticized the manner in which trade agreements have been made and administered, while at the same time approving the theory of reciprocity. He particularly condemned concessions to nations which can send into this country little but farm products.

Satisfactory Income.

Hull said that "naturally" the American farmer could not understand Landon's statements, but that "the farmer does know just what the true test of his welfare is."

"It is a satisfactory income from farm operations, reasonable farm values, and good prices for farm commodities," he said.

The income of the American farmers in 1935 was $2,000,000,000 more than in 1932, he said, and with trade agreements in operation it is increasing at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year.

Question Jumbled.

Text of Hull's statement follows:

"Gov. Landon's surprising New Mexico address yesterday faces in every direction and hopelessly misstates, confuses and jumbles the entire question pertaining to reciprocal trade policies and peace. His advisers can have but the one purpose—to secure farm votes by drawing the farmer's attention and memory entirely away from the conditions under which American agriculture was pushed into bankruptcy prior to 1933, and the conditions under which it has been rescued from bankruptcy during the years since 1933. He makes empty repetition of charges which have been completely exploded by all official statistics.

"Naturally, neither the American farmer nor, for that matter, any other person can make head or tail of the ambiguous, conflicting, and utterly nebulous statements of Gov. Landon pertaining to the reciprocal trade policy. But the farmer does know just what the true test of his welfare is. It is a satisfactory income from farm operations, reasonable farm values, and good prices for farm commodities.

Reached Lowest Level.

"The simple story of the course of American agriculture is that during the Administration prior to 1933 prices of such staple commodities as wheat, corn, hogs, dairy products, oats, rye slumped to the lowest level within living memory; that farm income fell almost vertically; and that farm values suffered a similar decline. In striking contrast, the cash income of the American farmer was in 1935 more than $2,000,000,000 higher than the depression level of 1932, while the prices of wheat, corn, hog products, dairy products, oats and most other farm commodities doubled or trebled. In 1936, with the trade agreements in operation, farm income is increasing still further at the annual rate of about $1,000,000,000.

"On all of this Gov. Landon is as silent as the grave.

"Gov. Landon and the other vote-seeking critics of the reciprocal trade agreements program would have the farmer shut his eyes to this vast improvement in his welfare and base his vote on the wild misrepresentations of the whole scope, nature and effects of the program.

"Gov. Landon's economic advisers must think that a second destructive panic is necessary to convince the farmers that they do not want a repetition of what happened to them under the reign of Smoot-Hawleyism, the forces of which are speaking today through Gov. Landon.

Speech Is Assailed.

Socorro, N. Mex., Oct. 20 (AP).—Gov. Clyde Tingley said here today he doubted if "New Mexico Republicans cared much for that patronizing speech" Gov. Alf M. Landon made before an Albuquerque audience yesterday.

Referring to a portion of the speech in which the Republican Presidential candidate told his listeners, many of them Spanish Americans, that "you are now citizens of the United States," Gov. Tingley said:

"Gov. Landon talked as though New Mexico had just been admitted to the Union. New Mexico was making history before Kansas started growing sunflowers."

Black Legion Note Found in Slaying

San Luis Obispo, Calif., Oct. 20 (U.P.).—Possibility of a Black Legion slaying was investigated by police today in the shotgun death of Milton Edward Zylicz, 28, school janitor.

The janitor's body, his head nearly blown off, was found in his office at the Fremont School, where he had been employed 14 years.

Police found a note which in part read: "Hope you get this shot. Think you know too much." It was signed "The Black Legion."

Police said the janitor had been receiving threatening notes for several years.

By Franklyn Waltman

THERE is no desire here to intervene as an umpire between such political titans as former President Herbert Hoover and Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau in their controversy over whether the Treasury practices honest bookkeeping or whether it juggles its figures and statements to conceal New Deal spending.

WALTMAN.

Mr. Morgenthau in one place in his reply to the former President, however, seems to enter a plea of confession and avoidance. He pleads guilty to the Hoover charge that the Treasury deducts repayments from certain revolving funds from expenditures before the totals are announced to the public. But Mr. Morgenthau seeks to avoid the charge that it is a custom that was practiced in the Hoover Administration.

Now in the art of disputation that may be a sufficient answer to Mr. Hoover's criticism. But to say that the Hoover Administration followed a similar practice in regard to accounting for revolving funds does not make such a system correct—nor candidly honest with the public. Surely the New Deal has not gotten to the point that it justifies its actions by citing the Hoover Administration as a precedent.

As far as the general public is concerned, the Hoover Administration entered RFC and Federal Farm Board transactions on its books and its daily Treasury statement in such a way as to make difficult a clear picture of Federal financial operations. And the New Deal handles RFC and other revolving fund transactions in the same way and to the same end. And it is more dangerous, for the New Deal has much greater spending authority.

The misleading nature of the system followed by the Treasury may best be illustrated by an experience I had yesterday.

Shortly after noon I read a brief summary of the Treasury daily statement on a local news ticker. The report stated that Treasury expenditures for this fiscal year—that is, from July 1 to October 17, inclusive—totaled $2,073,272,798, compared with expenditures in the corresponding period of the last fiscal year of $2,332,464,234. No details or explanations were given.

A friend standing beside me remarked that at last it appeared the New Deal was reducing expenditures—that so far this fiscal year $259,191,436 less had been spent than in the same period of last year. It seemed to me to be startling, momentous news and I rushed to the Treasury to ascertain whether the news ticker report was correct. I hastily scrutinized the latest daily Treasury statement.

Sure enough, there alongside of the notation, "Total expenditures," appeared the figures on the news ticker for the two comparative periods. For a moment it looked like the evil-minded Republicans had been maligning Mr. Roosevelt and the astute Mr. Morgenthau. But then I looked the statement over for details.

I found the so-called "general" or ordinary disbursements of the Treasury so far this fiscal year had totaled $1,297,976,229 or some $28,000,000 more than in the same period last year. Since there was no reduction there I looked under the so-called recovery and relief expenses.

In that column some figures showed decreases and others showed increases. For instance, Federal Emergency Relief Administration and WPA so far this year cost about $240,000,000 more than they did in the same period of last year. No reduction there! I tried adding up the column and then discovered that before certain figures in italic, diamond or pearl type—the smallest there is—the letter b, referring to a footnote. The old eyes are not so good and I almost missed it. The footnote explained: "Excess of credits (deduct)." And then I remembered the Hoover speech. These were revolving fund figures.

I learned the figures before which the italic letter b appeared represented an excess of receipts over expenditures by certain agencies, such as the RFC and Commodity Credit Corporation. Money loaned by those agencies two, three or four years ago now was being repaid and instead of being listed under "receipts," it is listed under "expenditures."

Thus I found that so far this fiscal year the AAA had an excess of credits amounting to $7,370,917; the Commodity Credit Corporation of $62,163,859; the Farm Credit Administration of $8,400,268; the Export-Import Bank of $103,011 and the RFC of $214,999,102. Adding those figures the total was $293,037,157. In other words, that sum in Treasury receipts was found in the expense column. Perhaps it does not make sense to you, but that is the way it appears in the Treasury statement.

Maybe this will make it clear: So far this fiscal year Harry Hopkins has spent for relief purposes about $240,000,000 less than he did in the same period of last year. Jesse Jones' RFC has collected this year $215,000,000 more than it has disbursed. By deducting the latter from the former, the Treasury in effect gives the impression that Mr. Hopkins this year spent only $25,000,000 more than he did last year. Would the SEC permit any industry to make such a presentation to prospective investors?

Thus to recapitulate, this $293,000,000 in receipts was offset in the statement against the expenses of other agencies. Actually the Treasury so far this fiscal year has disbused, not $2,073,272,798 but $2,366,309,955. Now to make a comparison.

The Treasury total for expenditures in the corresponding period of the last fiscal year was reached by the same method, except in that period the excess of credits totaled only $52,225,495. Thus the actual expenses in that period were not $2,332,464,234 but $2,384,689,729.

Now the difference is this: New Deal expenditures—so far this fiscal year are $18,370,774 less than in the same period of last year and not $259,000,000, which is the spread between the figures given by the daily Treasury statement as "total expenditures" for the two periods.

It is true that all the facts appear in the Daily Treasury Statement and it can be argued that nothing is concealed, but to find all the relevant facts and to know what they mean requires almost the services of a bookkeeper. When the Treasury statement says that the "total expenses" for a given period are so much, one should be able to accept that figure without spending several hours making computations.

The Treasury practice is misleading and deceptive. The instance of the misleading figures on the news ticker has been cited. Many newspapers carry only the totals or summary of the statement. And many New Deal orators use these distorted totals to prove fallacious contentions.

In the end the deficit figure is the same but the method used by the Treasury is as honest as the statement of a man who, after collecting his salary of $100, received from a friend repayment of a $50 loan, then spent $75 but told his wife he had spent only $25 because he had $75 left.

It is not a truthful statement, no matter who used such a system in the past. And that is not all that is wrong with the system persued by the Treasury. It constitutes a dissipation of what New Dealers are pleased to term "recoverable assets" which they offset against the debt. But more about that on another occasion.

Roosevelt Off To New England On 3d Vote Bid

Worcester Speech Tonight to Climax Motor Tour of Three States.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt hustled through a series of conferences today and, with a major speech in his brief case, turned toward New England last night in quest of the 29 electoral votes of Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut.

He canceled an afternoon press conference to provide time for polishing the address which aids said would climax his third campaign trip at Worcester, Mass., tonight.

Later he called in several reporters to say he had no plans to start out after the New England trip on a swing through Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

The President changed his mind about going to his Hyde Park, N. Y., home for a few days upon conclusion of his northeastern tour. He arranged instead to return to Washington late Thursday night.

Official business is expected to keep him in the Capital over the week-end. Monday he is scheduled to attend the dedication of a new chemistry building at Howard University, Negro school here, and Tuesday night or Wednesday morning he is to board his special train for New York to participate in commemoration of the fiftieth birthday of the Statue of Liberty.

Campaign Ends in N. Y.

This schedule would leave time for the Chief Executive to drop in on one or two additional Eastern States before the balloting two weeks from yesterday.

Five speeches which the aids said would be of an informal and probably extemporaneous character have been arranged for the two-day dash through New England.

The President will talk in front of the State capitols at Providence and Hartford, on the Common at Boston and also briefly from his automobile at Fall River and New Bedford, Mass., today.

Trip to Be by Motor.

Except for a train run from Worcester to Hartford tomorrow morning, the New England trip will be made by motor, starting at Providence around 9 o'clock this morning and ending in Stamford, Conn., about 4:30 Thursday afternoon.

Parker, Son Held In Wendel Case

By the Associated Press.

Mount Holly, N. J., Oct. 20.—Ellis Parker, renowned chief of Burlington County detectives, and his son, Ellis, jr., were arrested today on bench warrants issued by Federal Judge Guy L. Fake, before whom a sealed indictment was returned yesterday in Newark in connection with the kidnaping of Paul H. Wendel.

They were taken into custdoy at the office of United States Commissioner Ralph W. Haines by United States Marshal William P. McDermott and Chief Deputy Marshal W. B. Snowden.

Bail for the senior Parker was set at $10,000, and that for his son at $25,000. Personal friends and local merchants supplied the bail and the men were released pending their appearance before a Federal judge in Trenton October 27.

No specific charges were cited in the warrants.

World Pact Is Urged To Avert Tax Evasion

Geneva, Oct. 20 (AP).—There would be no escape from payment of taxes even should the person assessed flee to the ends of the earth, under a recommendation made by the League of Nations fiscal committee tonight.

The committee proposed and international agreement to combat tax evasion which, it said, would reduce frauds and increase the tax revenues of all nations, thus eventually leading to tax reductions.

Under the plan, companies in each of the nations party to the agreement would report every payment made to nonresidents. This notice would then be sent to the State wherein the recipient lived.

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

La Salle, Ill., Oct. 20 (AP).—Senator Millard E. Tydings, Maryland Democrat, criticized the Republican campaign tonight as offering "the same old philosophy, the same old policies of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, which in 1929 plunged this country into economic ruin."

"Generally speaking," Senator Tydings said in an address prepared for delivery at a Democratic rally, "Gov. Landon is standing today exactly where Mr. Hoover stood. * * * They think basically alike."

Tydings said that "as one who did not always agree with many of the policies pursued during the last four years," he appealed to the "American people not to go back to the leadership that brought on the depression, but to adhere rigidly to the broader outlook now dawning for the entire world and make the re-election of Roosevelt and Garner overwhelming."

The New Jersey Republican finance committee reported to the clerk of the House yesterday it had received campaign contributions totaling $298,470 from September 1 to October 16. The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee reported receipts of $19,882, including $4,500 from B. M. Baruch.

Of the former total, $224,128 was received in donations of $100 or more. Expenditures for the same period were listed as $284,828.

Of the Democratic Senatorial fund contributions $10,000 was received from the Democratic National Committee. Dr. Herman Baruch gave $1,000. Expenditures for the period by the Senatorial committee totaled $13,320.

Baltimore, Oct. 20.—Dean Acheson, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, whose resignation was reported to have been due to lack of sympathy with the Administration, has announced in a letter to the Sun that he would vote for President Roosevelt's re-election.

He wrote that Gov. Alf M. Landon "in his Minneapolis speech (criticizing the reciprocal tariff pacts) and Mr. Hamilton (Republican national chairman) in his challenge to the President to engage in a red hunt have decided my vote."

By the Associated Press.

Disclosure of a "very interesting" development within the next two days in the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee's investigations was promised yesterday by Chairman Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut.

He declined to say more for the time being other than that he had conferred on Monday with Walter Myers, committee counsel, and Louis R. Glavis, chief investigator.

Lonergan said he was being besieged with demands for investigations by both Democrats and Republicans as Election Day approaches.

"Everybody gets the jitters during the last two weeks of a campaign," he remarked.

Attorney General Cummings will open his campaign tour tomorrow, when, accompanied by Mrs. Cummings, he will lunch aboard President Roosevelt's train at New Haven, Conn. He will accompany the Presidential Party to the State line and the following night will speak in Bridgeport, Conn.

Cummings will speak at Peoria, Ill., next Monday; Detroit, Mich., Tuesday; and Cleveland, Ohio, on Wednesday. The following night he will deliver an address at Lancaster, Pa., and Friday at Baltimore.

By the Associated Press.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, Oct. 20.—Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, advanced his Midwestern campaign at a rally tonight by asserting President Roosevelt, in business life, had always "associated with money changers, stock operators and rich men."

This Knox cited as proof that the President's attacks on "economic royalists" were "a lot of nonsense." Roosevelt, Knox asserted, had been aiming "vague charges" at "the class to which he has always belonged" himself.

Speaking in the home State of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Knox charged that more hogs had been imported during the "great Roosevelt prosperity" than in the "bitter depression" year of 1933.

Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, who tops all others in length of service in Congress, yesterday filed the first Senatorial report of the campaign on money received and spent for his re-election.

"None," was his answer in each instance.

Shanghai (Wednesday), Oct. 21.—Gen. Chang Chun, Chinese foreign minister, definitely rejected Japan's two principal demands for Chino-Japanese understanding at a conference in Nanking Monday with Japanese Ambassador Siergu Kawagoe, Chinese officials told the United Press today.

34 Lose Lives As Dutch Boat Lists and Sinks

216 Are Saved in Java Sea Tragedy; Airplanes Rescue 43.

By the United Press.

Batavia, Dutch East Indies, Oct. 20.—The little Netherlands steamer Van Der Wijk, carrying 250 passengers, listed sunddenly in calm seas today and sank a few miles from Tandjong Pakis with the loss of 34 lives. A quake, to which Javas seas occasionally are subject, was believed responsible for the disaster.

Capt. B. C. Akkerman, who was saved, wirelessed in midafternoon that the ship was listing heavily. A moment later came an urgent S O S that the ship was sinking.

Seven Dornier flying boats, two Fokker naval bombers and several mine-sweepers were rushed to the scence. Survivors were struggling in the water or clinging to floating wreckage.

The flying boats saved 43 persons, landing time and again despite the danger from floating wreckage, and ferrying those rescued to the shore. Native fishing boats picked up others.

Women Voted Right of Office By Lutherans

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 20.—Departing briefly from a narrow road of conservatism, the United Lutheran Church in America today upheld the right of its women members to share with men in government of the church.

The convention adopted a majority report which had been in preparation since 1930, holding "that the election of women delegates to meetings of the synod is not unscriptural" and that they may hold offices in church councils, conventions and committees.

Proponents of the report declared, however, in presenting it that the general election of many women to church boards and conventions "is not desirable."

The membership of the church, which numbers more than a million, is almost evenly divided between men and women.

"Our report does not concern the right of women to ordination—it merely determines their scriptural right to serve," said Dr. H. H. Bagger, of Pittsburgh.

The delegates disposed of another principal issue before them by extending the work of a special commission working with the American Lutheran Church in an effort to arrange a merger of the two Lutheran bodies.

Dog Catcher Pays $20 Assault Fine For Striking Boy

Clyde F. Underwood, 41, employe of the District pound, was ordered to pay a $20 fine or spend 20 days in jail yesterday when he pleaded guilty to assaulting a 17-year-old messenger October 13. He paid.

Underwood who lives at 918 Fourteenth street southeast, pleaded not guilty to the charge last week, but changed to the guilty plea yesterday when he was arraigned before Judge Walter J. Casey, in Police Court.

The charge grew out of a fight between Underwood and Clifton Plummer, 17, of 4300 Reed place southeast, at Connecticut avenue and S streets northwest, over a crippled police dog "Sporty" that Underwood was capturing to take to the pound.

"Nobody loves a dog catcher," Judge Casey said before he passed sentence. "They are heckled by bystanders while performing their duty, but they should not lose their tempers to this extent.

"Inasmuch as a great deal of publicity has been given this case which in a measure is some punishment, I will sentence you to a $20 fine or 20 days," Judge Casey ruled.

Edith Maxwell, Awaiting New Trial, "Earns Keep" on Farm

The erstwhile school teacher of the Lonesome Pine region, sentenced last November to a 25-year prison term, now is reunited with her mother, her two sisters and her brother on a farm near Richmond. These photographs of her were made yesterday. She faces a second trial November 16 on a charge of killing her father with a slipper. Post readers having helped her get a new trial, are now sending in contributions toward the expenses.

in the Southern region will receive 90 per cent of the so-called crop diversion payments, and 100 per cent of the "Class 2" payments for soil building practices. Farmers in the Northeast region will receive full payment.

Initial payments of 90 per cent in some regions are in line with policies previously followed, and are designed to avoid possible deficits, and at the same time prevent holding up a large share of the applications until all of them are completed.

The second part of the payment would be made as soon as participation and expenses of county conservation associations had been determined, possibly around December 1. Applications approved after that date will be paid in full with a single check.

Wonders at "Coincidence."

Claiming PWA grants are moving in increasing volume into the so-called doubtful States as the election draws near, the National Republican Congressional Committee asked if it was just a "coincidence" that:

"In three States listed as 'sure' for Landon in the Public Opinion poll of October 11, grants for the month averaged $170,000 each.

"In five States in the deep South—States supposedly certain for the New Deal—grants for the month averaged only $105,000 each.

"In 11 of the so-called doubtful States the average grant was $2,100,000 each."

The committee said the 11 doubtful States received PWA grants totaling $23,000,000, and the remaining 37 States received in a like period only $17,000,000. It charged that six days before the September 14 Maine elections, grants of $350,206 were announced for Maine.

"Every time one of the segments of the New Deal political machine is found to be operating to perpetuate the Roosevelt Administration, the pious gentlemen in the Administration, like Mr. Ickes, yell 'It's a coincidence,'" said the Republican committee statement.

Edith Maxwell Starts New Life Under Death Trial's Shadow

By Edward T. Folliard.
A Staff Correspondent.

Drewrys Bluff, Va., Oct. 20.—A slender girl, her hair blowing in the wind, walked through a field near here today picking tomatoes for the evening meal.

She was Edith Maxwell, 22, once a school teacher in the Lonesome Pine country of southeastern Virginia, and known throughout that section as "the girl who killed her daddy."

Today she looked neither like a school teacher nor a killer. She wore a pair of blue slacks and an old coat. Freckles that disappeared during 14 months in prison were back on her tilted nose, and her hands were chapped and grimy from rich Virginia soil.

Whatever the future may hold, Edith today is living in a comparative heaven.

Working as Tenants.

For the first time in 15 months, she and her family are reunited and their happiness is something to see. They are living on a 45-acre farm, located 9½ miles from Richmond. It has been reported that they are "renting" this farm, but that is not so. They haven't enough money to rent it.

They are working the farm "earning their keep" as tenants.

There will be an interruption to this new life about three weeks hence; for Edith maybe more than interruption, although the others hope not.

On November 16, at Wise, Va., Edith Maxwell will be called to trial for a second time on a charge of killing Trigg Maxwell, her blacksmith father, with a slipper. In her first trial at Wise in 1935, she was found guilty on the charge and sentenced to 25 years in prison, although she pleaded that she struck her father with the slipper while he, in a drunken rage, was beating and threatening to kill her.

Readers of The Washington Post, convinced that the girl was not given a fair trial, contributed to an Edith Maxwell Defense Fund, and Charles Henry Smith, noted Alexandria, Va., attorney, was enlisted in the fight to obtain a new trial. The fight was successful.

In Richmond recently, the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals held that there wasn't sufficient evidence to justify the verdict in the first trial and it said that the judge in the case "erred" in not setting that verdict aside.

Hence the second trial on November 16. The $1,000 raised by Post readers was almost exhausted in the fight for this new trial, and a second fund is now being raised for the expenses ahead.

Meanwhile, Miss Maxwell, who was in jail from July 21, 1935, to last month, is free on $6,000 bond.

Her mother and her two young sisters broke up their home in The Pound, a crossroads hamlet in the Cumberland Mountains, a week ago. Here on the farm they were joined by Edith and her brother Earl, who gave up a job in Chicago to fight for her freedom.

Strange Environment.

It is a strange transition for the Maxwells. They are mountain people; the first Maxwell pioneer, so far as they can learn, went into the Cumberlands on the heels of Daniel Boone.

Earl is no stranger to flat country. He left home early and has traveled the country as a salesman. Edith left the mountains to study at the East Radford Normal College, but returned to teach in a one-room schoolhouse. Mrs. Anne Maxwell, the mother, has rarely been out of the hills and the same is true of the other daughter, Anne Ruth, 16, and Mary Catherine, 13.

Today they are all valley people, living in sea-level country that was hotly contested in the siege of Richmond in 1865.

But no matter how strange it may seem, they are all supremely happy. They go to bed at an hour when Washington is heading for F street and the movies, and they are up with the cock's crow.

Edith has chores that keep her busy throughout the day. There is a flock of Plymouth Rock chickens to be fed, and a boar and eight little pigs. "Spot," the rat terrier, has puppies, and they too must be given food.

Kept Busy All Day.

Then she gets water from the pump, milks the two cows in the barn, and helps her mother with the cooking and housework.

Earl takes care of Nellie, the mare, and handles all the heavy work involving the crops, assisted by two colored field hands. The farm, like any other, must show a profit, or at least break even.

Edith's sisters travel by bus to Chester High School, 6 miles away, where Anne Ruth is in the second year and Mary Catherine in the first.

They have a jolly time in the afternoons gathering hickory nuts in the nearby woods or playing with Spot' puppies.

Thirteen-year-old Mary Catherine, an elfin youngster with corn-colored hair, is "crazy" about her big sister, Edith, according to the others. She was in the Maxwell shack that night that Trigg, her father, died. In court, her legs swinging half way to the floor, she told of hearing her father—who was "plumb drunk," she said—threaten to attack Edith with a butcher knife.

Mary Catherine can't understand why, if she and her mother and the other members of the family don't want Edith punished, why anybody else should. Mary Catherine loved her daddy, too.

Kane Reaches Port.

New Deal Fight To Be Pressed By Vandenberg

Michigan Republican Says His Radio Technique Will Become General.

By the Associated Press.

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 20.—Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican) Michigan, assailing critics of his interrupted radio "debate" with the recorded voice of President Roosevelt, asserted tonight he would continue his attacks on the Democratic Administration "regardless of any efforts to restrain or to interfere with a presentation of what I believe to be the facts."

The Michigan Senator told a Republican rally in the Wilmington playhouse that his Chicago radio address Saturday, which was interspersed with recordings of speeches made by President Roosevelt in 1932 and 1933, was "a new technique" which he expected to "become practice in years to come."

The address was cut off the Eastern division of the Columbia Broadcasting System chain because of the use of the President's recorded voice.

Dramatic Emphasis.

If the Chicago speech was shocking to anybody, he said, "the shock must have resulted from the dramatic emphasis thus put upon the enormous gap between promise and performance."

The Senator declared the larger question involved "whether there should be a rule in free America which could be construed against the faithful presentation of the first-hand truth to the American people."

"I can understand the nervous perturbation of a radio station—which must answer for its life to Washington bureaucracy every six months," he said.

"But I cannot understand a radio commissioner in Washington who hastens to condemn my broadcast—without ever having heard it—while at the same time his commission orders all radio stations to carry the voice of the Communist candidate for President of the United States.

Attacks Farley.

"As for the genial Mr. James Aloysius Farley—who is one of the institutions which voters must approve or reject on November 3—when he says this faithful process of reporting is proof of his earlier charge that this is to be a 'dirty campaign.' I am constrained to observe that if there is any dirt' involved, it must lie in the proof of broken pledges; and I suggest that we run the laundry on November 3."

"I am a devotee of fair play in politics," he said. I agree with the broadcast ruling that no one should be permitted to simulate Mr. Roosevelt's voice. That would be deceit. But I submit that his own voice is the best evidence all around of what he said and how he said it. His radio voice is famous and persuasive. If his opponents welcome it in this campaign, his friends should be the last to complain that it is heard too much."

The Republican Senator closed the first portion of his address, dealing entirely with the Chicago address, with this statement:

"This closes the Saturday incident so far as I am concerned, but because my discussion did not reach the entire country Saturday night, I shall repeat tonight some of the problems which I then sought to present. It is not my fault that tonight I must quote Mr. Roosevelt second hand."

The address tonight was broadcast over the Columbia system.

Six School Exiles Of Prince Georges Won't Attend Here

"We don't want our children to go to school in the District," Mrs. August Ludke, mother of the six boys and girls kept from Prince Georges County schools for refusing to salute the American flag, said yesterday.

She was asked if Justice Jennings Bailey's ruling that nonresident pupils must be admitted free to schools in the District, offered a solution to the Ludke family's school problem.

The six youngsters, now attending a "school" set up in the family's living room, would be entitled to go to school in Washington under Justice Bailey's ruling, because their father is employed in the Washington City postoffice.

"No, we wouldn't consider that a solution," the mother answered. "We live in Prince Georges County and pay taxes here. We are entitled to send our children to school here."

Mrs. Ludke said it would be almost impossible to transport the children to city schools. "Mr. Ludke goes to work at 3:30 in the afternoon," she said, "and he takes the car with him. How could we get the children home?"

Antiquated Law Brands Youth By Open Trial

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Does crime begin in the cradle?

In the District it often does—judging from the antiquated terms of the bastardy law, which stigmatizes illegitimates from the minute they are born.

It does—judging from the legal layout for District delinquent children, which provides that they shall be prosecuted for offenses in a juvenile court that functions on a penal, rather than a protective basis.

This court, which came into being in 1906, was designed so that children up to 17 years of age should be taken out of the District Police Court and given a police court of their own. It is still a police court, a criminal tribunal.

Washington welfare workers and authorities on juvenile delinquencies are convinced it should be, rather, a court of chancery that assumes the duties parents are unable or unwilling to fulfill. They believe the latter would be a strong factor in reducing delinquency in the District.

"Branding" Greatest Injury.

Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, superintendent of the National Training School for Girls, said before the District of Columbia Congressional Committee, where hearings were held on the proposed law that would bring about this change: "After 20 years in working with problem children, I am absolutely convinced that the greatest injury that can be inflicted on a child is branding. * * * Trial in open court, trial before juries, automatically and inevitably brands, and automatically takes away the child's good name. The child may steal only a few cheap ornaments from the Five and Ten. The articles may be returned and restitution made. But if the machinery set up by the community acts inevitably to steal the child's good name, irreparable harm is done both to the child and to society. * * * To make a juvenile misdemeanant feel that he is a criminal is one of the greatest factors in making him a criminal."

Yesterday, discussing the necessity for eliminating criminal courts for children, Dr. Smith said: "Many children's cases now handled by juvenile courts should be adjusted by specially set up child guidance clinics. If the juvenile court may come into the picture at all it should be a court of equity or chancery, a court not limited by the provisions of common law, but one in which the judge can use discretion for the benefit of the child, with protection, not punishment, as his object."

Recognizing the District Juvenile Court legislation as being inadequate, faulty and contrary to the socialized court procedure now in effect in the majority of the States, a number of persons have long been interested in having it changed.

Proposed Law Drafted.

Two-and-a-half years ago the District League of Women Voters appointed a group to draw up a proposed new law in this regard. Mrs. Jesse C. Adkins, who at that time was chairman of the child welfare committee, headed the new committee, which, with the aid of Judge J. Wilmer Latimer, John E. Lasky and Miss Laura Berrien and experts from the Children's Bureau, drafted the proposed law.

Last spring in the form of a bill, this was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mrs. Mary T. Norton and in the other house by Senator Copeland. It was then referred to the District Committee, and a number of hearings was held in its regard.

Part of the statement made by John E. Laskey at the first hearing follows:

"The present Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia was, and is, essentially a police court for children under 17. Procedure as applied to dependent and neglected children in this court is now that of equity. The proposed bill to change the Juvenile Court act would afford children generally classed as "delinquents" like protection. Under the existing law those falling into the last named group are charged with specific offenses and are tried under formal criminal procedure—arraignment, plea and either trial by jury or waver of jury trial."

The new bill, he further pointed out, "is based on the broad principle that the child who comes before the court is to be regarded, not as a criminal but as one whose individual welfare coincides with the well being of the state, and who is to be saved to it rather than to be prosecuted by it."

Among other persons who appeared before the District Committee in behalf of the bill were Judge Fay L. Bentley, of the Juvenile Court; Judge Julian W. Mack, of the United States Circuit Court; Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, Charles L. Chute, executive director of the National Probation Association of New York; Louise McGuire, director of social work, District of Columbia Juvenile Court; Owen Lovejoy, National Youth Administration; Walter S. Ufford, chairman of the legislative committee of the District of Columbia Monday Evening Club, and Wilbur La Roe, chairman of the District of Columbia Parole Board.

Pointing out at that time, "the fact that the chancery court has been so successful in so many States ought to relieve our fears on the score," La Roe called the committee's attention "to a few of the very specific safeguards that are provided in this bill," as follows:

There shall be no "conviction" of "crime."

There shall not even be a "bringing into court," unless the court officer first investigates the circumstances and authorizes filing of the petition.

There shall be no commitment unless the judge is convinced that the child is delinquent.

Any person related to the child or in charge of the child may thereafter file a petition for reconsideration by the court.

Since hearings on the bill began near the end of the Congressional session, no action was taken on it. But the League of Women Voters, indorsed in this project by 70 District welfare agencies, will have it introduced again during the next session. Persons who have long been concerned with the needed change in the Juvenile Court are now more strongly convinced than ever that the District "must get away from the medieval practice of having delinquent children brought before a criminal bar of justice."

(What are the specific values in having a chancery court for delinquent minors? These will be discussed tomorrow.)

First Influenza Vaccine Tried on 30 Persons With 100 Per Cent Success, Scientists Reveal

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Oct. 20.—The first vaccine for influenza has been tried on 30 human beings with 100 per cent success at the Rockefeller Institute in New York.

This fact was announced to the American Public Health Association here today as the "preliminary skirmish" in what promises to be a successful campaign to mitigate the ravages of influenza and possibly to abolish the great influenza epidemics as effectively as yellow fever and black death.

Dr. Thomas Francis, jr., of the Rockefeller Institute, described the influenza vaccine. It is made in the laboratory from highly purified influenza virus, the "agent" which causes the disease.

Tests Made on Mice.

Before the human experiments, he said, vaccination tests on mice gave these animals immunity equal to that which follows an attack of influenza. How complete this immunity is and how long it lasts in mice or men is still unknown. But in the human being two months after vaccination the immunity indications are both strong and undiminished.

"This is the preliminary skirmish," Dr. Francis said. "It is very promising, but the campaign is far from complete. It seems likely that vaccination may reduce the virulence of influenza. If only reduction of severity is obtained and pulmonary pneumonia which may accompany flu is decreased, vaccination will be worthwhile."

An outbreak which medical men diagnosed as influenza in the United States and Canada in February and March of this year, Dr. Francis said, is shown by Rockefeller tests to be a different type of influenza than previous epidemics.

Explosive Outbreak.

This 1936 outbreak, he said, "was explosive" but no virus was found linking it with the known kind of influenza.

"It appears most likely," said Dr. Francis, "that the 1936 epidemic was due to a different disease entity. It appears that influenza may be several different diseases which cannot yet be distinguished from each other."

Influenza does not seem to be connected with common colds. In the Rockefeller laboratories, Dr. Francis said, the viruses which cause influenza and colds could not be grown under the same conditions.

Plumber Killed, Another Injured In Sewer Cave-in

One workman was killed and another injured seriously yesterday when a sewer excavation caved in on them at the sewage disposal plant in Blue Plains, D. C.

The dead man, Orestes Patrick Burke, 24, of 3330 Prospect avenue northwest, and Charles West, 27, of 326 Raleigh place southeast, were buried under several tons of earth. They were extricated by fellow workmen.

Burke was taken to Providence Hospital, where he died within a short time from a crushed chest. Police took West to Casualty Hospital. He was treated for chest injuries and cuts. Physicians said his condition was serious.

According to police, both men, plumbers, were intsalling pipe in a deep ditch when the earth caved in. They were trapped before they could reach a safety point.

Burke is survived by an 18-year-old wife and an 18-month-old daughter.

Wife's Slayer Puts Blame on Her Kin

Oregon, Ill., Oct. 20 (AP).—A psychiatrist testified today that Guy Tallmadge told him he slew his wife during an argument over her relatives' interference in their domestic life.

Dr. Charles C. Rowley, of the Dixon State Hospital, said the pallid defendant advanced marital strife as the motive.

His testimony as a State rebuttal witness sped Tallmadge's trial on charges of murdering his middle-aged spouse so he could be free to marry a red-haired widow.

The case was expected to go to the jury late tomorrow.

Bette Davis Reopens Film Suit in England

London, Oct. 20 (AP).—Bette Davis, blonde American film star, today decided to fight back against the court decision barring her from appearing in a prospective British film.

Her counsel notified Warner Brothers, who brought the original action against her because she was under contract to them, of intention to file an appeal in high court tomorrow.

In giving notice of the appeal, the counsel said he would ask for a "most speedy" re-hearing of the case on the general legal grounds that the court's decision was unfair to Miss Davis.

Miss Davis went into seclusion in Rottingdean apparently undecided whether to attend the hearing and use her "thought power" at close range in the court or to use it from Rottingdean, 60 miles from London.

Swedish Scientist Locates New Star

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 20 (AP).—Harvard Observatory announced tonight a cable from Copenhagen reported the discovery on October 7 of another nova, or new star, in the constellation Aquila.

The discovery, the observatory said, was another in a "most remarkable run of new stars."

It was made by the Swedish astronomer, Nils Tamm, at his private observatory, Kvistaberg, at Bro, some 50 miles north of Stockholm.

A few weeks ago, the observatory said, Tamm discovered another nova, also in the constellation Aquila.

The present one has been identified on Harvard plates made at Oak Ridge and at the time of the discovery, the observatory reported, was of the seventh magnitude. Four other bright novas have been discovered recently, the observatory announced.

First Low-Rent Project Homes Are Dedicated

Then, having won the good fight, Mrs. Hopkins retired to her home.

Aunt Minnie Henson, 69, who held open house throughout the day in her reconditioned alley house, added her tribute to the words of the distinguished speakers, as she sat in the sun by her doorway.

"Lord bless Mrs. Hopkins, she sho' was a sweet angel. (Come right in, honey, and look around'.) She used to bring all kinds of impo'tant white folks down to see the alleys. And now look what we got. Ah'm so tickled ah'm sick, it's the truth."

Aunt Minnie had hung an American flag in the shiny new bathroom with built-in tub with which the Alley Dwelling Authority had supplanted the old outside toilet facilities of London Court. It seemed to her a symbol of a more abundant life.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said Washington owes an especial debt to three women without whose aid the slum reclamation problem would never have been launched. They were Mrs. Hopkins, Mrs. Ellen Wilson and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

But it was Mrs. Hopkins who carried on the fight in its darkest hours and aroused the support of Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Roosevelt, Commissioner Hazen said.

"So it is to her memory," the Commissioner continued, 'that we turn today when we are beginning to realize that for which she fought so long. In memory of her, in recognition—to a very slight extent—of what Washington owes her, the Alley Dwelling Authority names this, its first low rental housing development, Charlotte Everett Hopkins place."

After the dedicatory exercises visitors flocked through the new houses built at a cost of $3,707.01 each and rented at $25 a month. Four rooms with baths, hot water, electric lights and ample closet space, the houses seem to the former alley dwellers like a dream come true.

"We have been offered $2 and $3 more a month in rent for them," John Ihlder, executive officer of the authority, declared, "but we are determined to rent them to the people for whom they were built."

The authority built 12 new houses and reconditioned 11 of the old alley dwellings. In six of the latter bathtubs and kitchen stoves were installed. Before these houses were improved they rented for $12.50 a month. Now the rent will be $15.55.

"I hope we can make it," said Aunt Minnie. "I've applied for my old-age pension, and if that comes through everything will be wonderful."

Ihlder said there was a serious shortage of low-rent houses in Washington and urged private builders to study the Hopkins Court development with a view to constructing similar dwellings on the outskirts of the city where cheaper sites could be found.

Dr. Emmett J. Scott, secretary of Howard University, said developments such as Hopkins Court would curb the spread of crime, disease and immorality. Those who helped bring about the development, he said, "have recognized a transcendant fact of life—we are indeed our brother's keeper."

Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, chairman of the Washington Committee on Housing, said Washington's hidden alleys have become the haunts of those who prey on society. "As long as we have multitudes living in alleys we will be confronted with a great public menace," he said.

Others who spoke were Arno B. Cammerer, executive officer of the National Park and Planning Commission; Howard A. Gray, director of housing, PWA, and Engineer Commissioner Dan I. Sultan.

Just before sunset lengthened the shadows of the gas tanks and the coal tipples across the street from Hopkins court in the 1200 block of L street southeast, the friends of Mrs. Hopkins departed.

And Aunt Minnie and her neighbors sat on their stoops amidst the new-found splendors and talked of better times.

They knew the spirit of Mrs. Archibald Hopkins was marching on.

Hopkins Ordered to Tell Why He Should Not Meet G. O. P. Demand.

By Felix Bruner.

Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator, was ordered by the Federal District Court here yesterday to show cause by next Monday why he should not be compelled to open to the public the records, including the names and salaries of employes, of his relief organization.

The order was issued by Justice Joseph W. Cox in a suit filed by Walter E. Edge, former Senator and Ambassador to France, and three other New Jersey citizens asking that they be given access to the records and reciting their repeated unsuccessful attempts to obtain them. Hopkins was the only defendant.

Besides Edge, who is now chairman of the New Jersey Republican campaign committee, the plaintiffs were Henry W. Jeffers, chairman of the New Jersey State Republican committee, and Daniel E. Pomeroy and Edna B. Conklin, members of the Republican National Committee.

Politics Charged.

The suit charged that the Democrats are using the records of the WPA for campaign purposes, but that the same privilege is being denied the Republicans. It further questioned the constitutionality of the relief acts on the grounds that legislative functions have been delegated to the executive branch of the Government.

The petition asked that Hopkins be ordered to make available to the public not only the New Jersey records but the records applying to all the States.

Hopkins, who was in New York, was quoted in press dispatches as saying that the suit was "political" and that he would not open his records for political purposes. He was quoted as saying, however, that he would abide by court orders.

Tax Debt Cited.

The petition pointed out that $46,125,641 of WPA money had been expended in New Jersey and it added that "over $6,000,000,000 of the public funds, all of which appropriations have increased the public debt which must be paid out of revenues to be derived from the imposition of Federal taxes upon the American people, including your petitioners" have been made available for relief purposes since the passage of the first relief act.

The petition pointed out that a system had been established against which there have been made charges of gross waste and extravagance in the administration of relief funds. It further charged:

"Said funds available to it are not being used solely for relief as intended by the Congress, but that expenditure thereof is in part influenced by political considerations, and that in particular, in addition to providing relief to those entitled thereto, there has been set up a vast administrative machinery of personnel whose appointments were dictated by political considerations and to whom excessive salaries are paid, of such amounts as to constitute gross extravagance and waste of the public funds, thereby reducing the amounts available for the legitimate purposes of said act."

The question of whether the administration of relief has been economical or wasteful and of whether funds have been diverted from purposes in accord with the public interest are issues in the Presidential campaign, the petition recited.

Point Right to Date.

For this reason, it held, the voters have a legitimate right to the information sought. Only statistical information of the general nature from which it is impossible to ascertain the facts has been disclosed, the petitioners told the court.

The petition then recited repeated attempts made by New Jersey Republicans to obtain relief administration records. It quoted an order issued to subordinates by Hopkins on June 2, instructing them to reveal no information without permission of the Washington office.

It also told of a letter of October 15 to Hopkins, asking for the information, and of Hopkins' reply denying the demand, but at the same time stating that "the American public is entitled to and will receive full facts and figures concerning the operation of the Works Progress Administration."

Helen Keller's Teacher Is Dead At Home on L. I.

Mrs. Macy, 70, Victim of Heart Disease; Famed Pupil at Bedside.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 20.—The woman who gave half a century of her life to Helen Keller, brought speech and comparative sight to America's noted deaf mute author and lecturer, died today as she had lived—still holding her famous pupil's hand.

The end of the devotion of Mrs. Anne Sullivan Macy for the girl who conquered eternal darkness came early this morning in the home they shared with Miss Polly Thomson, Miss Keller's secretary, at Forest Hills, Long Island. Mrs. Macy was 70 years old.

Years and years ago, Mrs. Macy taught Miss Keller to "read" by "writing" words on the blind girl's palm with her fingertips. A miracle of education and patience later gave Miss Keller the power to speak, even to read, as she became one of the most famous women of the past decades.

But this morning time rolled back again. Miss Keller sat at the bedside of her benefactress. Mrs. Macy was in a coma, as she had been for four days following a heart attack. This time it was Miss Keller's turn to try desperately to awaken recognition through her fingertips, as Mrs. Macy had taught her. But the aged woman died without rallying.

"My teacher is set free at last from pain and blindness. I pray for strength to endure the silent dark until she smiles on me again. "My teacher has gone from me a little while but I shall feel her presence anew when my eyes are blessed with light, my ears saved unto harmony, and my imprisoned light set free."

Miss Keller spent all her waking hours at the bedside. Only one week from today, October 27, another in the long line of honors and tributes that have come to them over the years was to have been paid them both by the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

They were to have received together the association medals for 1936 for "leadership of youth and development of American character."

5 Disciplined For Navy Yard 'Falsifications'

Records and Time Cards Were Changed by Men, Inquiry Reveals.

Climaxing several weeks of investigation by high Navy Department officials, including Secretary Swanson, the Navy Yard yesterday announced that five of its electricians had been disciplined for alleged falsification of records and time cards.

On Monday the Navy Department disclosed the suspension of Harry T. Morningstar, master electrician, pending completion of an investigation to determine whether he was responsible for the reported irregularities.

"The cases of the other men," said a formal statement issued yesterday by Rear Admiral G. T. Pettengill, commandant of the Navy Yard, "were acted upon by the commandant prior to the decision in the case of Mr. Morningstar for two reasons: First, that the question of pay had to be settled, and these cases could not be held for any further length of time without complicating their pay status and, second, because of administrative requirements in the electrical department."

Admiral Pettengill said Albert L. Waters and William R. Baker had been demoted, Edgar B. Green and Philip C. Nicholson "fined" 15 days and 9 days' loss of pay, respectively, and Earl Griggs suspended 10 days without pay.

Waters, Baker and Griggs have the rank of quarterman electrician.

Woman Identifies Post Picture As That of Her Abandoned Baby

Baltimore Police Due Here Today to Question Mother on Story She Placed Son, 3, With Friends Until She Left Hospital.

A worried young mother soothed her 6-week-old baby in the House of Detention last night while policewomen and social workers delved into her past seeking an explanation for the abandonment of her 3-year-old son on a Baltimore doorstep Sunday.

Eagerly the young woman abandoned the alias under which she was admitted to Gallinger Hospital early in September after she saw a picture of her abandoned child in The Washington Post yesterday and revealed that she was Mrs. Ruth Brown, of Baltimore.

Before she came to Washington, Mrs. Brown said, she placed her son, Sherman, 3, in the home of friends near Baltimore who agreed to board him until she left the hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. John Fisher told yesterday Baltimore police Sherman was brought to their home by a couple whom they knew as Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tian several weeks ago. The Fishers agreed to board the child and Tian paid the sum due every week.

Last Sunday, Fisher said, he told Tian he would prefer not to board the child any longer and Tian left with the boy.

Fred Broadbeck, Baltimore cab driver, told police an unidentified man placed Sherman in his cab Sunday and told him to drive him to his mother at an address on West Franklin street. The man gave him a note to leave with whoever took the boy.

The note said the anonymous writer was not the child's father and was unable to pay for his board.

Mrs. Brown revealed she had promised the man known as Tian that she would return for her baby October 8, but on that date because of complications in her condition she was unable to leave the hospital.

Baltimore police are expected to arrive here today to question Mrs. Brown in an effort to learn the whereabouts of the man who abandoned her baby.

'Madama Butterfly' Subject of Lecture

Discussing Puccini's "Madama Butterfly," Arturo Papalardo, director of the Washington Schola Cantorum, began a series of lecture-recitals on eight standard operas last evening at the Washington College of Music. Vocal excerpts were sung by Mercedes Giron, soprano; Phyllis Fisher, contralto; Raymond Baine, tenor, and an octet of women's voices. Certain thematic and harmonic elements of the score were illustrated by the lecturer at the piano.

While the compression of the opera within the limits assigned resulted in a rather sketchy treatment of the libretto and the omission of several pertinent incidents, the lecturer succeeded in conveying the essential atmosphere of the work. Neither did time permit the discussion of the technical ingenuities of the music.

Lemke Forces, Townsend Bloc Oust Rev. Smith

Step Follows Statement Preacher Is Forming Nationalist Group.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 20.—Both the Union Party and the Townsend National Recovery Plan organization issued formal statements tonight announcing they were severing relations with the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, who announced in New York the formation of a nationalist movement.

Smith, one-time associate of the late Huey P. Long, joined the Townsend organization last June, when he was appointed to the national board of directors, and later followed its founder, Dr. Francis E. Townsend, in supporting William Lemke, Presidential candidate of the Union Party.

Dictatorship Tendencies.

In a signed statement, Dr. Townsend set forth:

"The Townsend organization is American in its foundation and ideals and I do not propose to allow any person with dictatorship tendencies, whether they be under the guise of the New Deal or nationalization, to stampede the Townsend movement in whole or in part into even partial indorsement. * * *

"I do know, however, that nationalism and centralization are both definite trends towards Fascism. As a matter of principle, his (Smith's) connection with our national recovery organization must be automatically severed.

"Gerald Smith shall have no connection with our organization henceforth. This is definite and final.

Gift for Oratory.

"Smith is not my adviser, or the adviser of the Townsend movement, as he claims. Gerald Smith is just a young fellow with a great gift for oratory. I felt that because of this gift he would be useful to the movement bearing my name. Feeling as he does about nationalism, Smith naturally can have no position in such an American institution as the Townsend Plan."

John Nystul, national campaign manager for the Union Party, termed Smith's action "not only ridiculous, but so completely at variance with the principles of the Union Party that I cannot too strongly denounce both Smith and those back of him who are responsible."

First national prize is $500 in cash and the winner will receive, in addition, a travel allowance of $200 for a trip to Washington to receive the award. The second national prize is $150, and third is $50.

Winner of the seventh contest was Miss Helen Mae Collentine, of Milwaukee, who received the award from President Roosevelt at the White House May 7 this year. Second prize went to Miss Peggy Weber, of New Orleans, and third to Miss Grace Wiesner, of Rochester, N. Y.

Admiral Grayson announced yesterday that full information concerning the contest may be obtained from the headquarters office of the Gorgas Memorial Institution, 1853 I street northwest.

The American Red Cross yesterday contributed $10,000 to the relief fund of the Philippine Islands Red Cross chapter for the aid of the victims of the typhoon which struck the islands October 9.

The Red Cross contribution was made following a request from Jorge Vargas, secretary to President Quezon of the islands, who said a large relief fund would be required for rehabilitation.

Firemen Help Sale of Seals For Tubercular

Engine Company No. 16 Members Aid Mailing in Waiting Time.

Following arrival of 10,000,000 of the new tuberculosis Christmas seals in 20 wire-bound cases consigned to the local Tuberculosis Association as the allotment to Washington for the coming annual seal sale beginning Thanksgiving day, the firemen on waiting time at Engine Co. No. 16, on Thirteenth street between K and L streets northwest, yesterday began helping in the preparation of the seals for the mailing.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

Buy and Use CHRISTMAS SEALS

Two or more of the uniformed nurses or staff members from the offices of the association were assigned to supervise the work of the firemen and they will be on hand daily at the engine house until the preliminary work is finished. Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the Tuberculosis Association, called at the station in person to thank Capt. John Sheahan for this service. Mrs. Grant then made the following statement:

"The little penny Christmas seals now being made ready for our annual sale for the thirtieth year have largely financed a great variety of health services in the long fight against tuberculosis not only here but throughout the Nation. While we have seen the tuberculosis death rate of the Nation decline more than half during these years, our own Capital City with a lowered mortality still has to face the fact of having the second highest death rate from this cause in the whole country.

"On this account our association must intensify and extend its work here. During the present year the work financed by the Christmas seals includes providing free X-ray examinations for over 12,000 adults besides over 2,000 children at the free clinic, numerous nurse visits to the homes of the sick, a summer camp for 60 tubercular children, special training for recovering patients, a course of training for two physician-nurse units for work among the colored victims of tuberculosis, free health lectures and literature for all, legislation for more hospital beds urged, and provision for medical research to improve methods of treatment of the disease."

New Plays Set Pace for Rivals In Tournament

Federal Agents, P.-T. A. and Takoma Park Casts Register Hits.

Easily the best evening of one-act plays thus far offered in the 1936 tournament, the Theater Group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation Athletic Association, the Buchanan Parent-Teacher Dramatic Club and the Little Theater of Takoma Park last evening at the Theodore Roosevelt High School offered their entries.

First on the program was the G-Men's offering of John Drinkwater's "X Equals Zero," where on separate parts of the stage is revealed the Trojan and Greek ideas on the futility of war and its suppression of more irenic pursuits. Lawrence Beckerman and Carlisle Smyth were the warriors stealthily decimating, one by one, the other's forces, with Leonard Lavenson and Will M. Kline, jr., the victims of the moment. Beckerman directed.

Ruth Giodloff's "Lavendar and Red Pepper" was the P.-T. contribution, with Mrs. T. Dougherty as the interior decorative faddist and Mrs. Freida Koegel, as the grandmother, the vitcim o fthe unwarranted "modernizing." Mrs. C. Kostokas was the maid and Marguerite Teachurn, the daughter who did not like the idea either. Friends were depicted by Mrs. Edward Wagner, Mrs. Innis Hart, Mrs. O. Kerby, and Mrs. A. Guess. Mrs. Catherine G. Edgerton directed.

"Red Roses," Granville Forbes Sturgis' drama of uxorial inconsistancy, was given by the Little Theater group, with Ruth Pratt, the wife, E. Francis McDevitt the artist and H. M. Smythe the waiter-husband. Smythe also directed.

In all three plays, collectively, there was exhibited the tournament's thoughtful productions, with the players, without outstanding exception, most competently cast and revealing surety on the stage which has, for the most part, been rather pronouncedly absent up to this time.

Each of the plays contributed to a well-rounded evening, and the productions were so offered as to draw from each its particular points of merit and entertainment.

Up To Congress.

Serious as is the dilemma it imposes on the Board of Education, the soundness of Justice Bailey's ruling that District schools must remain open to the children of non-residents working in the Capital City is not open to question. It was not the function of the court to grapple with the problem of overcrowded classes in the local junior high schools. Justice Bailey merely interpreted the clear meaning of the law as it stands.

Responsibility for the confusion and hardships resulting from this decision falls directly upon Congress. Having given legislative permission for the children of non-residents working in the District to attend the local schools, Congress then proceeded to deny those schools adequate facilities even for resident pupils. As classes grew larger and more unwieldy, and the influx of outside pupils continued, practical limitations appeared necessary. So the corporation counsel's office gave strained interpretation to the phrase: "shall be admitted."

Now that the problem is again in the lap of Congress it is time to do a little consistent thinking on the subject. If non-resident pupils are to be admitted to Washington schools, appropriations must be made to care for them. Moreover, it is clear that the extra expense should be borne by the Federal Government rather than local taxpayers. With adjacent communities growing rapidly, a policy of free schools for non-residents whose parents are employed here might impose a very unjust burden on District taxpayers. As a permanent policy, that arrangement would be intolerable, unless appropriate adjustments could be made in the Federal contribution to the local budget.

Of course, the best solution would be the development of better schools in adjacent counties. Montgomery County has already made admirable progress along this line. Unfortunately, some other nearby counties are not applying comparable standards. Citizens who are establishing permanent homes in those areas can be expected to demand better local schools. But temporary Government employes, unable to find suitable living quarters in the overcrowded District, should not be denied the right to have their children educated here.

In considering the 1938 budget, therefore, Congress will be under obligation to make allowance for this increase as well as for the growth of school population within the District.

The Crown And The Man.

"The strange luster" that surrounds a King glows with particular intensity in the case of the occupant of the British throne.

The long unbroken line of his royal forbears, the size and wealth of the far-flung dominions that acknowledge him as the embodiment of sovereignty, give him a status that is unique, even though his personal prerogatives are now severely limited. It is, indeed, not unfair to say that in the complicated and tradition-encrusted British system, the crown plays a role resembling in more than one particular that of our written Constitution.

This Constitution has of late been subjected to no small measure of criticism. Some argue that it is too rigid, too inflexible; that to make it suitable for the strenuous times in which we live it should be made less prohibitive. Others argue, with equal heat, that it is an instrument already sufficiently elastic for all desirable change.

But both the critics and the supporters of our basic charter as it is can congratulate themselves, at least, that the Constitution is not a person, as the British Crown in the last analysis must prove to be. As a symbol the King of England can do no wrong. He cannot even, in Blackstone's phrase, "think a wrong." But as a sentient being he is heir to all human frailties, including that of thinking that certain feminine companionship may mean more to him than the wealth of all the Indies.

Edward VIII might, under the circumstances, yearn for the delightful impersonality of our Constitution. Enshrined in a special niche in the Library of Congress, it is immune from all the emotions which the wearer of the British crown must feel. Nothing would please him more, no doubt, than some magic whereby he might become, in fact as well as in theory, a multiform personality. Then, in addition to being King of Great Britain, Emperor of India, Defender of the Faith and so on, he might also be, one part of him at least, just plain lovesick Edward, like even the meanest subject of his realm.

Inconsistencies Remain.

Since his Minneapolis speech Gov. Landon has evidently subjected the Administration's reciprocal trade program to more discriminating analysis. Probably the widespread criticism of his blanket indictment of the commercial treaties negotiated by the State Department has influenced his attitude. At any rate, his address at Albuquerque indicates that his opposition is now aimed at details of the reciprocal agreements rather than the principle on which they are based.

Thus narrowing his fire, Mr. Landon makes a number of effective points. His complaint that trade agreements are negotiated secretly touches a grievance that the State Department recognizes and is already seeking to eliminate. Domestic producers now have full opportunity to present their case to the negotiators. But they have no knowledge of the proposed concessions. Consequently, they are unable to discuss the specific points at issue. Negotiations would become extremely difficult if concessions should be made public before conclusion of the agreement. Yet some modification of the present arrangement seems desirable.

Still more important is the question of submitting trade agreements to Congress for ratification. The present arrangement of placing full responsibility for these treaties upon the Executive is supported by two chief arguments. It prevents log-rolling by protected interests in Congress. And many other governments with whom negotiations are carried on have full authority to act without legislative approval.

Against these arguments, however, can be brought still more compelling reasons for a change of policy. Since reciprocal treaties would be completed before they could be sent to Congress for ratification, they could scarcely be defeated by log-rolling. Congress would have either to accept or reject the proposed concessions as submitted to it. And, so far as lobbying is concerned, it is well to remember that the mere transfer of discretion from Congress to an interdepartmental committee does not put the lobbyists out of business.

So long as we live under our form of representative government, it cannot be logically argued that treaties of any kind should become operative regardless of whether Congress approves or disapproves. In the United States the situation is entirely different from that obtaining under dictatorships or even parliamentary governments where the executive may be ousted as soon as he loses the confidence of the majority.

Since the reciprocal trade policy is apparently to become permanent (having been indorsed in principle by Gov. Landon as well as the present Administration) adjustment of its procedure to one more in keeping with American governmental practices may well be considered by the next Congress.

Gov. Landon's plea for a liberal trade policy would have been more effective if he had emphasized these proposed changes instead of exaggerating disadvantages arising under the New Deal. His complaint that "our domestic markets are being flooded with products produced on foreign farms" is as subject to sharp discount as is his assumption that the G. O. P. farm program is non-political. Agricultural imports have certainly increased, but the volume is small in comparison with domestic production. And the chief cause of the larger influx is not the reciprocal agreements but the drought. It is well to remember, too, that the decline in farm exports began long before the New Deal inaugurated its scarcity program, as the ill-fated Farm Board could testify.

In rejecting isolation and the idea of self-sufficiency, Gov. Landon is undoubtedly sincere. Like Secretary Hull, he proposes to use the principle of reciprocity to promote world trade and to strengthen international stability. But apparently he would make no agricultural concessions, while he promises to retain protection for "the efficient American manufacturer and workman." His sharp criticism of the relatively minor and, in general, carefully guarded concessions granted by the Hull treaties is not a promising portent of the "healthy exchange of goods" he wants to see.

It is unfortunate, too, that Mr. Landon passed over another opportunity to clarify his own farm program. As they stand, his proposals include subsidies to encourage exports and thus "give the farmer a full crop at a fair price."

But at the same time he would protect American producers against "the unfair competition of foreign nations which indulge in . . . subsidies." It is high time for realization that our subsidies look as unfair to the other fellow as his do to us. Nor would our subsidies be any less subject to retaliatory action because justified at home by restriction "to the family type farm."

Food And Fancy.

It's no novelty for poets to sing variations on the old theme of "A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread, and Thou." But it is generally agreed that the poet's concern with pots and pans is primarily romantic. It comes as a surprise, therefore, to learn that the 1924 winner of the Blindman prize for poetry was a speaker at the Gourmet Society of New York City this week.

Joseph Auslander was the Society's visitor from Elysian fields. It may have been that he was seeking a new gastronomic combination for poetry to replace the hackneyed one of nectar and ambrosia. If so, he had no further to look for a single phrase than the fourth line on the menu: Stekt Snoripa a la Suedoise. Indeed, Mr. Auslander might well have had just such a flight of epicurean fancy in mind when he entitled his latest book of poems "More Than Bread."

Eleventh Hour Shifts.

The return of Dean Acheson to the Roosevelt fold follows on the heels of similar action by James P. Warburg, and is justified by the former Undersecretary of the Treasury with generally similar reasoning. But of the two cases that of Mr. Acheson is much the more impressive.

Mr. Warburg, who was financial adviser to the Administration at the abortive London Economic Conference of 1933, has since that time publicly attacked the President in unrestrained language. Not the most sweeping of his presumably considered conclusions was the charge that "Mr. Roosevelt's nature is such as to make him an ineffective and dangerous incumbent." Now Mr. Warburg tells Secretary Hull that "the all-important issue" is the restoration of world trade, "upon which you have made and are making your fight." Under the circumstances there is delicious irony in Mr. Hull's reply, observing that "In all I have done I have but followed the leadership of the President."

Mr. Acheson, on the other hand, has kept dignified silence since he broke with the Administration nearly three years ago. His present decision to vote for Mr. Roosevelt is not minimized by previous rash denunciations. It is thus more convincingly attributable to the reasons cited, such as his faith in the Administration's trade-restoration program and his distaste for Mr. Hamilton's red-baiting activities. The votes of Mr. Warburg and Mr. Acheson have identical value; not so the attitudes of the two men.

These gains by Mr. Roosevelt must be balanced against the defection of Amos Pinchot, who shifts his support from Roosevelt to Landon because he regards the New Deal "as a betrayer of American progress" and because he find in the Republican candidate the qualities "of character and common sense which the New Deal lacks." Mr. Pinchot, whose liberalism is scarcely subject to question, seems to feel much as Mr. Warburg did before the campaign opened. That which influenced the latter to change his mind has not weighed heavily with the former.

All of which goes to indicate the indecisions and offsetting considerations which still weigh heavily with many of the electorate. And if that is the plight of the voters, what shall be said of the difficulties confronting the major candidates in these last two weeks? Every word they say in public will be weighed in the balance. And those which are found wanting to some will be precisely those which provide the last touch of positive conviction for others.

The A. D. A. House Warming.

Washingtonians have an opportunity to inspect one of the most interesting experiments yet undertaken in low-cost home construction in this country. The dwellings opened yesterday for a "house-warming" by the Alley Dwelling Authority are especially significent since they represent the transformation of demoralizing slums into well-built modern homes and pleasant environment.

Unlike some other agencies struggling with the housing problem, the A. D. A. undertook to provide "the least expensive acceptable dwellings that are possible in the 'old' city under District of Columbia laws and regulations." Each home has the essentials of good housing—abundant light and air, water supply, sanitary conveniences, semi-fireproof construction, etc. Each row house contains four rooms, two on the first and two on the second floor. Nothing of luxury is to be found in any of them, but they are nevertheless palatial in comparison to Washington's alley huts.

In a detailed report on the Hopkins Place development (appropriately named for Mrs. Charlotte Everett Hopkins because of her work in the cause of alley reclamation) the A. D. A. lists the costs of its new houses as $3,707 for interior dwellings and $3,947 for corner houses. They will rent for $25 and $27.50 per month, respectively. John Ihlder, executive officer of the A. D. A., has hope of reducing these costs to some extent in the next group of houses undertaken. Experience, he believes, will make some further economies possible. But at present they represent the minimum cost of providing suitable new quarters for a family in the congested residential areas of Washington.

It is worthy of note that these houses have not been subsidized. The rent to be charged includes amortization, interest, taxes, administration costs, insurance and many incidental expenses. If these houses should be rented to people on relief, allowances would have to be considerably increased. It is quite obvious, however, that good but modest housing can be provided for low-income families at a cost that is not prohibitive. Every city in the country could profitably inform itself on what Mr. Ihlder's organization has achieved along this line.

Pegler—Pro And Con.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the benefit of others who must have realized how poverty-stricken is the cultural background of Westbrook Pegler, how he goes off half-cocked, and how extremely few and lean are his constantly repeated ideas, let me state that his "omniscience" means something only where athletics are concerned. He is a swell sports writer and on the sports page is where his clever pen is most effective—unless, in the future, he takes the trouble to gather some authoritative knowledge on the other subjects about which he is prone to write.

M. E. PHISTO.
Washington, Oct. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have heard many favorable comments on Westbrook Pegler's "Duck Soup for Fanatics."

Here are a few: "Well, that's hitting the nail on the head." "Pegler is voicing the opinion of many Catholics that I know." "That's the best ever on Coughlin." "Every member of our family of ten thinks the same as Pegler about this. We like Pegler."

Some Catholics have been bewildered about Coughlin but feel at ease now, knowing that one in authority is in their midst, right straight from Rome. They know he will do the right thing at the right time. Pegler's opinion is right.

MRS. R. F. TRUESDALE.
Washington, Oct. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to Mr. Pegler's article in The Post of October 14, and especially to the two last paragraphs thereof, as I remember it, the prohibition law came into effect during the Administration of Woodrow Wilson, who at that time represented the Democratic Party. I may be wrong, but I think Mr. Pegler has gotten his dates mixed and is blaming the Republican Party for something that came about during the real Democratic regime.

JOHN R. KIRKWOOD.
Washington, Oct. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The case of Pegler is becoming more and more distressing. Until lately his poignant memories of prohibition days caused him to raise a maudlin lament about them not oftener than once a week. But now we Post subscribers have to stand by and watch him weeping into his grog every two or three days.

Can't we do something to help? Many would be glad to contribute to a Post benefit fund to buy Pegler enough liquor to drown his mordant memories—and it would be no great loss if his column were washed away on the flood.

However, if he is to go on writing in his present state why not endeavor at least to bring him far enough out of his hangover to realize that this is the campaign of 1936, not that of 1924, or 1928, or 1932, which he seems to be fighting over again under a muddled impression that Coolidge, Hoover or Carrie Nation are candidates running for President this year.

Can't the editorial management get it through the fog to Pegler that there is no need to keep on filing two columns a week battling for repeal? Take him around and show him Roosevelt's pictures on the bar room walls where the proprietors gratefully hung them in token of a victory now three years old.

Also for the good of the Democratic cause, for which Pegler seems to be puffing and plugging, can't it be got through to his consciousness that he is mixing his cues and that, although repeal represents the only platform pledge in the 1932 Democratic platform that has been carried out, Mr. Farley's organization for some recondite reason seems to have decided to try not to stir up any mixed emotions on the subject this year.

LOUIS TAYLOR.

A New Deal View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Three years ago half of my relatives and close friends were in deplorable circumstances. The wolf had moved in and pocketed the key. Today every one of them is prosperous and the future is rosy. We represent the largest class in America—the average class. What care we for the Republicans' arguments? What they did to us during their last dispensation still rattles so loud we can't hear what they say! In some countries Hoover's speech would have cost him his head! We do not care to be under the banner of those whose spirits reek with ridicule, sarcasm and venom.

We read that Gov. Landon is the freshest member of his whole entourage. Well, it takes little effort to be a mouthpiece.

Roosevelt averted revolution. Of all the human faults ingratitude is the most deplorable, yes, despicable! Never did feelings run so high. The hearts of the common people are aflame with love for Roosevelt. Let the Republicans, through the power of their restored affluence, remove such a champion and savior at such a time and they may yet have revolution on their hands. Perhaps their evolution will yet force them to wash their hearts in sorrow, that laundry of the soul.

A BYSTANDER.
Washington, Oct. 18.

A Real Tax Muddle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You publish so many instructive and inspirational columns, I wonder why you do not publish a column telling citizens of the various States about their status in the District of Colunbia?

Having ceased to be residents of the various States, in the legal sense, where are they liable for personal taxes? Is the District entitled, as it should be, to the tax on their personal property, stocks and bonds, etc, or, if not, where should these persons, who wish to perform their duty as citizens, pay, and to whom?

I am asked daily by persons who want to comply with civic obligations, questions concerning their status as residents of the District, and I confess I am entirely ignorant on the subject. There are persons who have resided in the District many years who have paid no tax, although they are perfectly willing and anxious to bear their part of the national burden.

Why doesn't Mr. Morley, or his critical reporter, write an article upon the subject?

A friend who pays on real estate in Pennsylvania has just received a request to pay tax in the District and asks me the pertinent question as to whether tax on personal property is payable both in the State and in the District?

A CONSTANT READER.
Washington, Oct. 18.

After Mrs. Simpson's Divorce.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The impending divorce of Mrs. "Wally" Simpson seems to set some of the members of the British aristocracy agog. Today she stands on a lofty eminence in the world's spotlight, envied by the peerage of England, and probably maligned by snobs and social climbers.

According to the British library of information, if King Edward VIII wants to marry Mrs. Simpson after her divorce, that is nobody's business but his. She will ascend to the British throne with all the regal rights as Queen Consort. And if she should bear Edward VIII a child, that child would be the rightful heir to the British throne in spite of the child's American parentage.

There is no legal barrier under existing laws. There seems to be no reason why King Edward VIII should not marry a commoner provided the necessary announcement is made before the privy council of his intention to marry. Such marriage would presumably place no obstacle to the assumption of the full dignities of Queen Consort. The only legal exclusion is contained in the act of settlement of 1701 under which a person who "shall profess the popish (Roman Catholic) religion, or shall marry a papist, shall be excluded, and be forever incapable to inherit, possess, or enjoy crown and government of the realm." . . .

In England, marriages in the royal family are regulated by the royal marriage act of 1772 (12 Geo. III, Chapter XI), which provides that descendants of George II must obtain the king's consent "signified under the great seal and declared in council." The significance of this act in case of the marriage of a king would probably be in the phrase quoted. The great seal may be affixed without an order in council; this combined with the phrase, "and declared in council," would preclude any necessity for asking the consent or approval of the privy council. A declaration seems to be all that is called for in the case of the King's marriage. The last unmarried sovereign to ascend the British throne was Queen Victoria. Public announcement of her marriage was made at a meeting of the privy council at Buckingham Palace on November 23, 1839. In this instance, it seems clear that the announcement in council was the necessary formality.

There are a number of precedents for marriage between members of the Royal Family and commoners, which are mentioned in "The English King" (Jonathan Cape, London).

Marriage of an English king to a commoner is not without precedent in English history. One needs only go back about 400 years to find King Henry VIII who married one Catherine too many. Henry VIII was the third husband of Catherine Parr (the King's sixth wife), a commoner whose influence over Henry VIII was for good.

S. P. ALMIRANEZ.
Washington, Oct. 19.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the center of your front page of October 16 I find an article arising from a divorce action which a British subject is said to be bringing against her British husband. It is printed under the headline: "All London Newspapers Refrain From Giving Report of Action."

Why, Sir, in Heaven's name, should they not? Of what general interest to the English public would be the news of a case that, for anything known to the contrary, is simply another instance of divorce in the upper classes? Your dispatch referred to the lady in question as "the King's closest woman friend." I do not know whether this is so, nor is it a matter which would greatly interest me if true; but I should certainly not take it upon a newspaper's word. Any news value which this case could possess would have to arise from the King's being especially interested in it. Such an implication lies behind your article and is the more trivial in not being expressed. Your observation that Mrs. Simpson is moving into quarters "less than a mile from Buckingham Palace" is almost a finishing stroke.

There has been much idle speculation in the American press on the possibility of King Edward's marrying. Aside from its being a matter of no consequences whatever to us, does anyone suppose that the King of England, even if he were to consider marrying a commoner, would chose a divorcee and one of foreign birth?

Why not tell your readers, in defense of English newspapers, that the better ones are more concerned with giving news than any American paper is—a fact that you have the best of reasons to appreciate. There are a limited number of column-inches to a newspaper page. By actual count I find that on your front page today 48 per cent are occupied with matter that only a person of perverted interests could call news. Is your staff aware that this year's "silly season" in journalism has ended? D. L. HARLEY.
Washington, Oct. 18.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Mr. Lieb Is No Myth.

My Democratic friends down South are beginning to amount to a nuisance with their requests for Republicans suitable for plucking or skinning. Recently I gave a fine Republican to Mr. Jack Randolph, of Richmond, Va., because it seems that some previous column of mine had scared away a Liberty Leaguer, whom he was saving for Election Day. I thought it was only fair to make good to Mr. Randolph, so I sent him Mr. Fred G. Lieb, the retired baseball journalist, who not only desires to bet on Mr. Landon, but offers even money and might be induced to give 6 to 5.

But now come several other clamorous Democrats of the Southern tier practically demanding that I drop everything and dig up Republicans for them. Anyone would think I was in the business of raising Republicans.

Not only that, but the boys are beginning to cut in, and that is not only bad sportsmanship, unworthy of Southern Democrats, but a dangerous business which might lead to gun play on the field of honor, suh. I gave Mr. Lieb to Mr. Randolph alone. If he is generous to give away pieces of him to other deserving Democrats down South that is his business. He can cut Mr. Lieb to hash for all I care, but Mr. Lieb is his to have and to hold.

* * * *

I desire to make this clear because Mr. Albert Stone, of the Jackson Sun, of Jackson, Tenn., has written direct to Mr. Lieb at his winter home in St. Petersburg, Fla., trying to obtain a piece of him or maybe all of him, without consulting Mr. Randolph.

I am sure Mr. Stone did not appreciate the ethical impropriety of this, and trust that he will cease these advances until he has consulted Mr. Randolph. This amounts to poaching—or muscling, as I believe the more modern term is—and surely Mr. Stone, of Jackson, Tenn., could not face his family, friends and pastor with the sin of poaching or muscling gnawing at his soul.

Moreover, Mr. Stone is rather disagreeable about it, for he says in his letter to me that he doesn't believe there is any such Republican as Mr. Lieb offering even money on Mr. Landon.

"If Mr. Lieb is not a mythical character," says he, "it seems only fair to ask that either you put us in touch with him or refrain from publishing such statements."

* * * *

Well, now, Mr. Lieb is no myth, although I will concede that a deserving Democrat living in Jackson, Tenn., is justified in entertaining doubts of the existence of an even-money Republican at this time. To him it might have the sound of the story of the fabulous Loch Ness monster which boosted the Scottish tourist season a few years ago, but I think my record will show that I have never boosted anything, and I am a little surprised and hurt by Mr. Stone's skepticism.

Indeed our Mr. Lieb is no myth, and he is even more aggressive than I believed at first, for he has written me a letter describing his system of selecting Mr. Landon and threatening to go right through Richmond and dig Mr. Randolph out of his hole.

It is the most astonishing thing I ever heard of, and I have heard of the rabbit which chased Doc Blanton's hound dog up Main street in Union City, Tenn., that time. That rabbit, however, was full of Tennesee corn, and I am sure Mr. Lieb is not. At least, he wasn't when I saw him last, and his letter to me is very legible and does not sound as though he were at all corned, unless you consider the contents.

* * * *

"My supply of the Rosevelt bologna dollars is limited," Mr. Lieb says, but that is bologna itself, as Mr. Lieb retired from baseball writing only because he could not afford to earn any more money and thus send his income tax into the top bracket. "My supply is limited, but I believe I can accommodate Mr. Randolph, of the Richmond Times-Dispatch. I picked 17 out of 20 pennant winners in 10 years, and my world series record is 18 out of 25, but politics has always been my softest touch. But I do not pick elections with wheat statistics and carloadings, as you say. I am ear-to-the-grounder. One has to be smart and know how to interpret the rumbles, and this year the rumbles against the New Deal are quite plain to a trained ear-to-the-grounder."

Mr. Lieb then adds that he will be driving boldly right through Richmond in a few days and is willing to meet Mr. Randolph and the Democratic State Committee, if it comes to that, right on the courthouse steps. Maybe they ought to turn out the National Guard, because this thing could get serious, with all those Democrats milling and scuffling and shouting, "Leave me at him, men!"

Maybe, in the interests of public order, Mr. Randolph ought to form a company and issue shares in his ear-to-the-grounder, who is to my certain knowledge no myth, and to the best of my recollection a stranger to that corn.

Birth of a New Party?

By P. T. Hitchens

FOR length this little book, as Mr. White says, isn't much of a book. Exclusive of the appendix, which contains the Republican and Democratic Party platforms and the acceptance speeches of Gov. Landon and President Roosevelt, the book is just 100 pages long. But those hundred pages contain a keen and penetrating analysis of the national political situation by one of the shrewdest political observers of our time.

Mr. White has been reporting national political conventions for 40 years. But, possessed of an astute and sagacious mind which cuts to the heart of realities, Mr. White's discussion of the political situation that now confronts the country is more than an analysis of platforms and candidates; it is, at bottom, an analysis of deep, fundamental movements that are stirring within the cauldron of national affairs.

• • • •

OF, perhaps, prophetic significance is the change which Mr. White notes in the character and outlook of the Democratic Party. For more than a hundred years the party of Jefferson, Jackson, Bryan and Wilson has been agrarian in outlook, reflecting more or less accurately the ideas and political aspirations of the rural elements in the population of America. But with the abandonment at Philadelphia of the two-thirds rule in the selection of Presidential candidates the Democratic Party took a step which definitely placed the balace of control of the party in the great cities—chiefly the cities of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the Great Lakes.

Historically, moreover, the Democratic Party has stood for a minimum of Federal and a maximum of State and local control over pubilc affairs. But, Mr. White points out, under the leadership of President Roosevelt the Democratic Party has installed a Government so centralized in Washington "that Alexander Hamilton would gasp at its audacity."

Commenting on the change in the attitude of the Democratic Party toward centralization of power in Washington and on the shift in party control from rural to urban centers against which the great Democratic leaders of the past had fought, Mr. White states:

"Was it by accident or out of some subconscious recognition of a profound truth that the official band in the gallery before the chairman's gavel fell played 'Massa's In de Cold, Cold Ground?' He certainly is."

• • • •

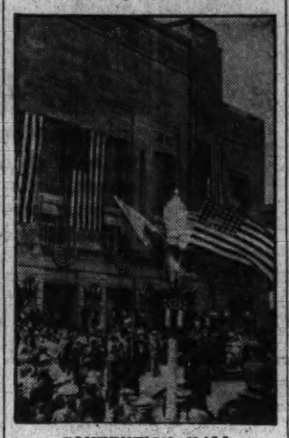
AS Mr. White sees it, a new party was born at Philadelphia. "It is," says Mr. White, in essence and politically, the creature of Hamilton; its Jefferson ideal is to establish approximate economic equality even if to function it must deny to the average man much economic liberty. • • •

"It was cribbed definitely a leftist party. It is bred of three blood streams: First, the old South, a remote grandmother; second, the new Tammany, an all-American wigwam wherein the Irish rule the urban population, and, third, in its blood is a strong strain of farm-labor radicalism! Franklin Roosevelt is its daddy as much as Thomas Jefferson was the father of the Civil War and post-war Democracy and as much as Alexander Hamilton begot the Republican Party as it lived from Lincoln to Hoover."

In Mr. White's opinion, the new party carries within it seeds that may cause its own destruction; but for the moment it is full of life and ardently follows the leadership of President Roosevelt who, in his Philadelphia speech, proclaimed the advent of a new order—"all undreamed of by the fathers." But of the new order for which Mr. Roosevelt stands, Mr. White says: "His reality is not ours. The decision of this campaign is between his reality and that other reality which would save the old order for evolutionary rather than revolutionary change."

• • • •

IN the view of Mr. White both parties promise "the brave new world" but, "in platforms and in candidates, the temperamental contrast of the parties indicates that



CONVENTION HALL AT PHILADELPHIA.

Roosevelt is leading his star-eyed cherubim panting into their millennium, while Landon, occasionally jabbing an elbow in the ribs of the Union League boys and with a come-hither grin for agriculture and industry, is content to go inching along to the Republican promised land."

And finally:

"Roosevelt and Landon are symbols of their party objectives, Roosevelt incarnates the new unhampered leadership which inspires hypnotic devotion with the incandescent lure of his promise. Landon personifies the old average, middle-class, country-bred American, with all the faults of his virtues! These two symbols, and the economic forces struggling around them, rather than the platforms very likely will decide the battle of the year."

The American Entry

John T. McIntyre's Novel Entered by This Country in All-Nation's Contest.

"STEPS GOING DOWN," by John T. McIntyre. (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50.)

Pullman cars, race horses and books are not named with the convenience of the public in mind, and the title of this book is a case in point; the adverb should have been "around" instead of "down." For this book goes 'round and 'round and comes out nowhere.

The principal rider on this merry-go-round is Pete, a young man of the lower stratum of society. He is joined from time to time by many different people who hold the eye for a moment and then are lost to sight, never to appear again, but their very shallowness as characters nullifies any importance they might otherwise have. There are his aunt Dora, tremendously shapeless and the only person evincing any common sense; Thelma, an inconsistently dumb girl with whom Pete puts up for no understandable reason, and Gill, the last in a line of wealthy dope dispensers and users, and the most likable person in the book. The number of supernumeraries, however, so far outweighs that of principals, that one is conscious only of a crowd in which no one stands out.

At the opening of the story, Pete had gone into hiding because Slavin, who has landed him a job in a bank, is being hunted for theft and Pete, in loyalty, is afraid that if he is forced to testify he will unwittingly betray his benefactor. Pete hides out in different parts of the city and under varying circumstances, but when the story is ended actually all that has happened is that Pete has decided to go to the police and let events take their course.

The book is full of enthrallingly interesting episodes, but unfortunately these are tied into no theme, no continuity. Many of them are just the sort of thing one hears from strangers on street cars and waiting in stations for trains or at drinking parties with people one has never met before. The impression is received that Mr. McIntyre had heard hundreds of such tales and they interested him so much that he wished to record them for others, but he has failed in his purpose. There was a splendid opportunity here, but it was lost both because of the large number and of interjecting them without relation to the story as a whole.

Certainly this is a book of dialogue, but it is sadly lacking in descriptions which would have, at least, painted a background and a few characters against which all the rest might possibly have been oriented. Even much of the narration of incidents is in the style of a person's thoughts being told, a sort of pseudo-conversation. The book bogs down noticeably during some of the philosophizing and theorizing, not because of the inherent value of the theories, but because of the manner in which they are put forth.

As an experiment, there is something to be said for this. It is obviously an attempt to achieve pure Americanism both in content and context, and deserves applause for this if nothing else. But also, there is brilliant and pithy writing of experiences necessarily strange to the majority of its readers. These serve only to startle, however, as there is a complete lack of emotion in the book which, consequently, causes no emotion whatsoever in the reader.

There is, decidedly, a wealth of material, but it does not turn to gold in the book. Pete has no love for Thelma nor anyone else; Thelma's occasional tinges of jealousy are not reconcilable with her dumbness; no one shows hate or pride or affection, and even Slavin's treachery has no feeling. It is not logical, because, especially in this kind of people, does one find in life a lack of inhibitions and self-control which makes them give way to whatever passions beset them.

"Steps Going Down" is the American entry in the All-Nations competition, and there is real cause for concern if this is the best example of new writing being produced in this country today.

All-Nations Book Prize Awarded

A Hungarian author by the name of Jolanda Foldes has been awarded the $19,000 prize for her entry in the All-Nations novel contest. Her first book won a Hungarian literary prize. Her $19,000 prize novel is titled "The Street of the Fishing Cat."

This winner of one of the highest prize awards ever made for a novel, was born in the small Hungarian village of Kenderes. She attended the University of Vienna and the Sorbonne and later eloped at the age of 19. She instructed foreigners in French and supplemented her income by working as a factoy girl in Paris. Divorced from her husband, she went to Egypt to work in the Hungarian Embassy and while there married a second time.

"The Street of the Fishing Cat" is about a group of exiles from all over Europe who have gathered together in Paris. The theme is based on the experiences of a Hungarian family and their friends who are expatriates from their native lands.

The book is said to be notable for its humorous and moving characterizations and for its many colorful scenes in the famous cafes of the French capital.

"Perpetual Boondoggling"

By Felix Bruner.

H. L. Hopkins Presents His Point of View on Work Relief.

HARRY L. HOPKINS, chief of the New Deal relief army, believes that for a long time to come there will be in this country a large number of able-bodied unemployed for whom the Federal Government will be responsible. He believes further that the only practical method of handling relief is through providing work for the needy unemployed.

The relief problem is looked upon by Hopkins in somewhat contradictory fashion. He expresses the belief that industry is able to absorb all of the unemployed, but at the same time he leaves the inference that he does not expect this to be done.

A generous half of the relief administrator's book is taken up with a recital of the approach of the Hoover Administration to the problem. The remainder is a description of the New Deal's own activities, which he had directed from the start, through the ramifications of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the brief Civil Works Administration, and the much more ambitious Works Progress Administration.

Hopkins has spent in the neighborhood of $6,000,000,000, perhaps more than has ever been spent in peace time by a single individual, with the possible exception of Stalin of Russia. The reactions of this social worker who has become a champion spender are contained largely in a final chapter which he titles "The Outlook."

• • • •

THE LANGUAGE seems surprisingly restrained to one who is accustomed to Hopkins' oral outbursts, such as the one in which he asserted that his critics were "too damned dumb" to understand some of his organization's boondoggling activities. To a large extent, in discussing the Hoover relief attempts, he lets the record speak for itself. He has the advantage of having, apparently, inherited the files of some of the various Hoover relief committees and he draws upon them frequently for hitherto unpublished material.

WPA DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. Flood Control Raising Level of Grade Around Munitions Building.

He undoubtedly has selected that material best designed to prove his point, which is that every relief attempt before the New Deal took the job in hand, was a failure because the task was not viewed with an appreciation of its magnitude, importance or permanency.

Hopkins expresses the New Deal outlook on the relief problem in these words:

"There is reason to think that the present system is capable of giving to all its workers those things which are now the expectation of a comparative few: a warm, decent place to live in; a liberal diet; suitable clothes; travel, vacations, automobiles, radios, and college educations for those who want them. Even one who does not pretend to be an expert on the subject can see a few rather obvious means by which we can approach the problem of redistribution. Wages must be raised and hours lowered. Unfair profits will have to be translated into lower unit price. Some 3,000,000 persons over 60 years of age should be taken out of the labor market. Most of them are there not because they want to be, but from dire necessity. Compulsory school age, with some exceptions, probably should be raised, and young boys removed from competition with their fathers."

These things, he says, are possible, but he is skeptical that they will be done. He continues:

"Until the time comes, if it ever does, when industry and business can absorb all able-bodied workers —and time seems to grow more distant with improvements in management and technology—we shall have with us large numbers of unemployed. Intelligent people have long since left behind them the notion that under fullest recovery, and even with improved purchasing power, the unemployed will disappear as dramatically as they made their appearance in 1929. • • • There will remain as the responsibility of the Government, a standing army of able-bodied workers who have no jobs."

• • • •

THE ONLY solution, as Hopkins sees it is a work program. A program of large-scale public works, he believes, will not be sufficient. He does not say so in so many words, but his conclusion is obviously more or less perpetual boondoggling.

Hopkins' objection to the Hoover relief attempts appears to be twofold: They involved handling of relief by local agencies and they did not take into consideration the magnitude of the problem. Hopkins apparently has nothing but contempt for the idea that relief can be handled locally. Throughout he insists it is a Federal problem and must be directed from Washington. Perhaps the Republican platform declaration for turning back relief to local authorities may have had some influence in inspiring his repeated protests against the idea.

The Government's relief boss seems not to be too cheerful about his own accomplishments. He professes to feel that he has not done enough.

"It is curious," he says, "that among the almost innumerable criticisms we have experienced, the one most truthful allegation is have made except by families who depend upon us. We have never given adequate relief. We can only say that out of every dollar entrusted to us for lessening of their distress, the maximum amount humanly possible was put into their hands."

• • • •

WHILE CONTENDING repeatedly that work relief is the most desirable of all forms of assistance, Hopkins says that the giving of cash "is by all odds the best form of relief except work." He makes much of maintaining the self-respect of the person who must accept relief.

Ridicule of projects which some list under the head of "boondoggling," Hopkins finds amazing. He says the ridicule is fast abating and points to that fact that "one now finds the metropolitan elite at WPA 'first nights' because they expect to find there both fine performance and new subject matter." He feels that among other things he had brought about "a renascence of the arts."

The Hopkins volume is an excellent handbook of relief—from the point of view of the man who is running the job. After the author disposes of the Hoover attempts, the book is a clear, fairly dispassionate recital of what has been done and what at least the writer feels is going to have to be done.

"SPENDING TO SAVE," by Harry L. Hopkins. (W. W. Norton & Co., $1.50.)

Bootleg Queen

"KIT BRANDON: A PORTRAIT," by Sherwood Anderson. (Scribner's, $2.50.)

Though this book is subtitled a portrait, the title character is given little more than an introduction to the reader. When Kit Brandon departs, rather indefinitely, on the last page of the book to seek for what Mr. Anderson calls "a real partnership in living" she is scarcely more alive in the reader's consciousness than she was when she fled the hill country to commence her progression from mill loom to big-time bootlegging.

It is a sorry day when the outstanding feature of a book by Mr. Anderson lies in the swift progression of purely physical action. However, the best sequences of the book deal with Kit's speeding flight over mountain roads with the liquor caravan. Even this action, at times cinema-swift is retarded by Mr. Anderson's excursions into bypaths to hold forth on such unrelated subjects as mass production, or the despoiling of the forests. The recurrence of the "flash back" method of narration, familiar to the motion pictures, also has a retarding effect.

No real insight is given into the character of Kit Brandon, whose growth is labeled rather than developed. Opportunities to breathe life into his heroine are overlooked by the author. Kit is jailed for a few days until a fixer can accomplish her release. We are told that she sat nervously on the edge of her cell cot. That's the limit of it. No key is given her emotional reactions. No insight is given into her thoughts.

It has been previously indicated that Mr. Anderson often breaks in to hold forth on some topic or other to score a point. Sometimes this approaches the ridiculous, as when Kit Brandon, bootleg queen, tired, hounded by the police, reflects, "I want something new now." Mr. Anderson takes opportunity to point out that this is "the feeling common to thousands of young men and women in a civilization dominated by commercialism."

There are the plots of several good short stories drawn into this book, but their effect has been dissipated by the demands of even a loosely constructed novel. Material, the author had in abundance. He might have chosen to give us a really significent work against the background of the prohibition era; he might have chosen to really produce a portrait, but as it is he has touched upon many phases of American life (mill towns, "five and tens," prohibition) without giving reality or significance to any of them.

Walpolana

"A PRAYER FOR MY SON," by Hugh Walpole. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.)

"A Prayer for My Son" will not disappoint Walpole enthusiasts; if, indeed, the chief pleasures of literature are those of recognition, it should delight them. Mr. Walpole's new book possesses all that charm of familiarity which has characterized his work for more than 30 years, and even those of the faithful whose acquaintance dates no further back than the Herries series will unhesitatingly recognize the setting in the English lake district to which the author has attributed the vaguely supernatural quality of a milder, Anglicized version of the Black Forest, the carefully eccentric, typically English Walpole characters, the mellow, tobacco-scented charm exuded by the school of Walpole, Priestly et al. As the publishers remark, "No warmer, more human novel has ever come from Hugh Walpole's pen."

Those of us, however, who do not share the devotion so lavishly extended on both sides of the Atlantic to Mr. Walpole's work, may perhaps wonder just why such a novel as "A Prayer for My Son" should be not only published but bought and, to all appearances, read in 1936. That Mr. Walpole and his publishers believe that this book presents "• • • a pattern of lives against the troubled background of today" is suggested by the careful references to Hitler, to the League of Nations, and to Proust and Dorothy Sayers, apparently selected by the author to represent the literature of the twentieth century—a documentation somehow startling in relation to the unreality, the superlatively "character" quality of the protagonists themselves.

The type of mind which brought forth the Fascist battalions of Germany and Italy, which in Mr. Walpole's England has been truly shown in such a novel as Storm Jameson's "In the Second Year," becomes in this book a whimsical, even rather wrong headedly admirable off-shoot of the hearty tradition of magnificent British eccentrics. Mr. Walpole apparently does believe that it can't possibly happen here.

Meanwhile, "A Prayer for My Son" will please Walpole admirers and offend no one—except, possibly those who care for the great tradition of English writing and not for the picturesque competence of its decline.

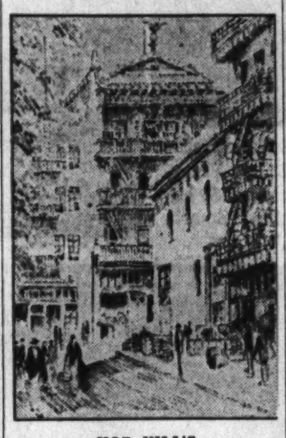
City Within A City

By Marion J. Harron

Member, U. S. Board of Tax Appeals.

SAN FRANCISCO'S Chinatown is a city within a city. Having developed from an Oriental settlement to an important commercial center, its history merits a separate volume to supplement the story of San Francisco by the same author. Mr. Dobie presents an authentic report of the life of the Chinese in San Francisco and in California from the days of the gold rush to the present. Early newspaper records, municipal reports and pamphlets are the sources of this history and the author's personal recollections and understanding of the Chinese provide an abundance of ancedote told with wit and grace.

The first arrival of the Chinese in North America is a subject of legendary and scientific speculation. There is a theory that the Chinese may have discovered America as far back as 458 A. D. which seeks support in pointing to similarities of the Mexican Aztecs and the American Indians to the Chinese. Records report the first arrival of the Chinese in San Francisco in 1848, when two Chinamen and a woman arrived with a trader. Thereafter, the immigration was rapid, mounting to 12,000 in 1851, and the increase at such numbers as 18,000 the first eight months of 1852 gave rise to the first cries of a yellow peril which would have thrilled the heart of Hearst. The Chinese took and kept as their own a section of the best land in the city on the slopes of what is now called Nob Hill.



NOB HILL'S CHINATOWN.

The earthquake and fire drove them out (accompanied by an army of rats), but in spite of efforts to relocate them elsewhere, the Chinese returned to the site of their old quarters on the cobbled hills of Sacramento and Clay streets.

The post-1906 Chinatown has flowered between a little Fifth avenue and a fragrant latin quarter and has retained much of its old world character in spite of the infiltration of Japanese in recent years. Nevertheless, the old Chinatown is gone and it is only through such work as Mr. Dobie's that we can review the past.

• • • •

Too many writers have pictured San Francisco's Chinese in the fashion of the West's "Klondike Annie." Not all these Chinese were coolies, house boys, dope peddlers, slave smugglers or gangsters. Clannish and mysterious to their pioneer neighbors, they lived according to their ancient customs and Mr. Dobie portrays with understanding their essential characteristics as a people, their social organization and their ceremonies. With real effort to avoid the sensational, Mr. Dobie lets newspaper reports, court records and authentic documents of gambling, blackmail, assassination, the plight of prostitutes, the traffic in slave girls speak for themselves. The accounts of tong warfare and elaborate funerals of the leaders are reminiscent of contemporary Chicago gangsters.

But crime and vice are only one part of the life of Chinatown, as in any city, and we are given, in contrast, descriptions of the organization of trade and benefit guilds, of the Chinese theater, art and religion and a full repertoire of the feast days and the legends explaining their origin. The technique of smoking opium is revealed, the mystery of birds nest soup is solved, and the totally alien wares of food and herb shops are identified.

• • • •

BY far the best part of this book is the account of early San Francisco's attitude toward its Oriental population. Totally lacking in a true understanding of the people, San Francisco patronized, persecuted, exploited and harrassed these heathens; suspected them of eating rats when tired of rice; and enacted ordinances to cut off their ques. Ordinances passed by a sanitary city government snuffed out some of the arts in Chinese crafts. No longer can one witness the amazing method which Chinese laundrymen had for sprinkling clothes. The device consisted of filling the mouth with water and forcing it through the teeth in a fine spray. Most of the street occupations are gone: the cobblers, tinsmiths, chair menders, lanternmakers and the occasional maker of opium pipes. Mr. Dobie remembers these characters from his childhood days and brings them to life in his reminiscences.

There remains to be written the story of Chinatown by a Chinaman. Lacking that, Mr. Dobie's work is most satisfying. His research is commendable. His observations bring to light little known facts which makes his account informative as well as entertaining. The illustrations by Mr. Suydam are of present day places and are exceptionally accurate in architectural detail. The interested reader should refer to "Old Chinatown" by Arnold Genthe and Will Irwin, published in 1913. Mr. Genthe is a great artist of portrait photography and his collection of pictures of the old Chinese will provide a charming supplement to Mr. Dobie's work.

Winner of Femina Prize

Claude Silve Invests Book With Both Clear-Sightedness and Great Restraint.

"BENEDICTION," by Claude Silve. (Appleton-Century, $2.50.)

In commenting on this novel, so solid in structure yet so rare in spirit, one gropes for the "right word and the right accent." The book is all that its title claims—a benediction, and the very desire to touch it with a reverent lightness, breeds a clumsy hesitancy which, in itself, is something of a descration. It is a book which weaves its spell surely and invisibly, as music does. To reduce its magic to words savours of the futility that brands a critic's commentary on a Mozart quartette distilled through the muted strings of mellowed instruments played by virtuosi.

"Benediction," written by Claude Silve, has just won the Femina prize in France, where literary standards are exacting and where literary traditions are strong. In his notably sure translation of the story, Robert Norton has rendered a real service to both French and English readers. His version of "Benediction" brings along all of that atmosphere in which the story has its being, and his performance, for sheer delicacy of touch, ranks second only to that of Claude Silve, herself, whose gift is almost uncanny.

Within the 281 pages of this book one lives at the Chateau Dampard, with its "inexplicable and magic patterns only to be met with in old houses where human beings do not speak, and things have leisure in their silence, to cast spells upon each other." With a firm and beautiful precision the characters are fitted into this background.

There is the Marquise de Brades, whose "heart was subterranean and armorial like those ancient emblazoned vaults where the forgotten dead lie in state," served by Avenant, her butler, "ossified by 50 years of habit," and moving noiselessly across the pages with a dignified and proud subservience. There is the old bishop whose presence at the chateau is explained by the dedication of the family chapel. Two children, Anna and Eusebe, fleck the shadowy gloom of Dampard with the brightness of their playful spirits. The teller of the story is their governess, whose sensitiveness to the life at the chateau gives the tale its touch of intimacy, its depth of humanity and its nostalgic charm.

Not a great deal that is of tangible importance happens in this story. Horace comes home with his Italian bride, and for a brief interval, an infinite happiness is realized in which all the spirits of the past and the future combine. It is as though time were momentarily arrested at a given and perfect point in its endless cycle, just long enough to give us a crystal consciousness of its meaning. For the duration of this waking dream, "shadow and sunlight are the same." But the spell snaps as inexorably as it was woven. Old Mere Loisil's forebodings become realities, romance turns under the touch of life to realism, the sweet becomes bitter, children are all at once mature, and maturity grows childish.

"Benediction" eludes the description that would hold it captive, for it has that timeless fluency that is a part of every fleeting moment. Its pages abound in countless "intimations of immortality" like those that come to all of us from time to time through certain sounds and silences, through certain fragrances and touches, through personal recognitions, transcending the moment that is, and giving us glimpses of life's star "that elsewhere hath its setting."

The clear-sightedness and the restraint with which Claude Silve interprets Dampard, its people, their thoughts and their feelings, give the book an almost classical purity. Rarely does so unusual an artistry combine with such sense and sensibility, and while "Benediction" may be too tortuous a book for the general reader, it is sure to appeal to all those whose zest for living is made the more intense by a cultivated and discerning taste.

French to the core, full of the love of a day that is dead, it is a story that will fall upon the ears with the tinkling echoes of old harpsichord strings, that will fill the nostrils with the pungency of bergamot and marjoram, that will tempt the taste with delicious smoothness of old claret, and that will delight the eyes with the glint of shadows along leafy allees.

So full of liveliness are all of the observations and, so quick with originality are all of the comparisons that spring to the author's mind that the book is robbed of every trace of silly sentimentality or preciosity. Both faults might have been easily enough slipped into. Instead there is only a gentle graciousness that lives with deeply sensed vitality that is all its own.

3 New Envoys Present Selves At White House

Ministers of Italy, Spain, Canada Talk of Trade, Amity.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt and the newly appointed diplomatic representatives of Italy, Spain and Canada exchanged expressions of hope yesterday for continued cordial relations between their countries.

The envoys were received at the White House in that order in separate ceremonies marking the formal presentation of their credentials.

Senor Don Fernando de los Rios, new Ambassador of the Spanish Popular Front government, appointed after his predecessor had resigned because of lack of sympathy with the Madrid regime, departed from the usual diplomatic formula to speak of "the invasion of a foreign force which has broken the regime of law in my country."

He used this phrase in conveying, on behalf of the President of the Spanish Republic, a hope for the preservation in this country of the principles of liberty and democracy, which at the present hour are menaced on this earth."

President Roosevelt responded:

"I trust that you will assure his excellency, the President of the Spanish Republic, that the people of the United States sincerely desire to preserve the friendly relations now existing between them and the people of Spain and warmly reciprocate the wishes for a propitious future which you have expressed in his name and in the name of your country."

Both the President and Fulvio Suvich, new Italian ambassador, avoided in their exchange of amenities any mention of the envoy's status as a representative of His Majesty, "the King of Italy and Emperor of Ethiopia."

Clinging to its policy of non-recognition of territory acquired by force, this Government had stipulated in advance that the reception of Italy's new ambassador would not constitute recognition of Italian sovereignty over Ethiopia.

Suvich is expected shortly to inaugurate discussions looking toward a resumption of negotiations for an Italo-American reciprocal trade agreement, now stalemated more than a year.

Sir Herbert Marler, new Canadian minister, who arrived in Washington only Monday, voiced his government's "earnest" desire that "the cordial and harmonious relations which have prevailed for so long a period between the governments and people of the United States and Canada shall ever be maintained and strengthened."

On the Air Today

Fred Allen and his wife, Portland Hoffa, begin their fifth year on the air this week. The actual anniversary falls on Friday but the "picklepuss" (as he refers to himself) comedian decided listeners should hear the abuse that will be his lot, at the hands of his stooges, and so advanced the date to coincide with his Wednesday night air time.

"Looking back over my radio career," Allen reflects, "I find it has brought me enough money to pay for the nervous breakdown it's causing, enough fame to make up for turning me into a baggy-eyed hermit and enough laughs to drown out the sound of my gnashing teeth.

"I entered radio all in the spirit of pun and since that day I've whined enough jokes into the microphone to last a filibustering Senator 12 months—or a vaudeville comedian 12 years. I used to be a vaudeville comic myself—until my pocketbook got burnt in too many short circuits.

"When I took to the air I thought it was just a lark. Little did I dream it was a whole flock of parrots. Those were the days when top comedians were still getting away with dressed-up vaudeville routines. I tried a couple myself. My rating was so low they typed it in radium so it would show up in the cellar.

"I decided to try situation comedy. The only person who thought it was funny at first was Portland. Before long, I had spotted a page boy who chuckled occasionally. Now we seem to have hit on a workable pattern. That's all a comedian can ask—aside from an option renewal."

Fred Allen really has the claim to originating the use of non-professional performers on a big-time program. The Bowes show followed later in the same year.

Other features today:

Gracie Allen—Continues her difficulties with Jimmy Newell, trying to "save" him from a breach of promise suit, WJSV, at 8:30.

"Gay Desperado"—Nino Martini sings "The World Is Mine" from his new picture, with Kostelanetz orchestra, WJSV, at 8:30.

"Come On, Let's Sing"—Presents songs in native Chinese, bell ringers and an inquiring reporter, WJSV, at 9:30.

Something in the way of a novelty broadcast is promised by WMAL at 5:15 when three announcers conduct a "spell-me-down-F-street" program. The idea is to do a spelling match on the street, using passersby for spellers.

Speaking of comedians, as we were above, word trickles through that the shelved shades of Jack Pearl will take substance next month and Baron Munchausen and "Sharlie" will again pour forth on the Nation's loud speakers. The date is set for November 9, using the facilities of the N. B. C. Blue network. (WMAL, locally.) Pearl, according to the notice, has been in South America and Europe most of the two years he's been absent from American radio. His foil, Sharlie, is Cliff Hall. With the return earlier this season of Joe Penner, the comedy roster seems to be complete once again.

While politicians, network executives and the public at large were all aflutter last Saturday night over the Vandenberg matter, I took a moment to reflect on the breakdown of network policies and vanishing of tender spots in regard to the use of the names of one company's stars on another net. When Walter O'Keefe wanted to burlesque a football scene, he selected the name of his old friend, Ted Husing, with whom he worked many months at C. B. S. as the name of the sports commentator. Tsk! Tsk! Imagine using the name of the ace sports commentator of Columbia in a program over an N. B. C. network!

Sir Herbert King-Hall, Retired Admiral, Dies

London, Oct. 20 (AP).—Admiral Sir Herbert Goodenough King-Hall, who retired from the British navy in 1922, died today, aged 74 years.

Sir Herbert joined the royal navy in 1875 and became a full admiral in 1918, rising through the ranks. He was decorated for his services at the bombardment of Alexandria and in the Egyptian war in 1882, later acting as naval transport officer in Natal during the South African war.

New Name Soon At Dude Ranch; Fun Still Same

By Chanticleer.

The Dude Ranch soon will be only a name to be recalled by those who have spent many enjoyable evenings there. But that isn't the whole story. The Ranch is being remodeled, redecorated, renovated and, in general, is receiving a going-over.

Tomorrow night you are invited to the Berwyn spot for a gala reopening—practically a premiere night. Principal business at hand will be the selection of a new name. There'll be noisemakers, confetti, souvenir hats and all the other things that make a ceremony at the Dude Ranch something to remember.

Among the names already suggested are Pioneer Club, Club Coral, Rustic Club, Rustic Casino, Gold Rush Casino, and of course, your own idea. A special five-act floor show has been booked. Gentlemen of the orchestra will be garbed in cowboy hats, silk blouses and boots.

What with the Russian Troika open, the season can settle down to a comfortable routine. Last week's Troika opening was typically enjoyable with Marusia Sava still the tops as far as this observer is concerned. Marusia is not so sensational in her appeal to the ear as Yasha Nkiogsoff is to the eye (Nikogsoff is the little fellow who does thrilling things with a handful of knives and lots of hand-clapping support from the audience). But it is Marusia who holds the room to silence with her song of th elittle gate that separates the beauties of the garden from the ugly outside world. Sasha Bartnovsky is back leading the band, diminutive Miss Harris sings again with Sasha's music—and the floor attraction as a whole is splendid. It's the Troika in all its attractiveness.

From Chicago's Palmer House come Moel and Jean Shannon to entertain patrons of the Mayfair. Yes, they're just as youthful as they appear. In fact, very young. But they're capable of producing a thunderous response with their accordian, guitar and singing . . . Gaiety is the keynote at the Lotus where the Paul Florenz revue (Folies Parisienne) holds the spotlight. Lovely gals, beautiful costuming and Jean Carpenter, Arline Grant and Eddie Kinley featured in everything from fan dances to musical comedy numbers. Also the Georgette Brothers in a comedy boxing riot.

Henry Halstead has moved into Cocoanut Grove to replace the Tremaine band—further maintaining the pledge of the Grove to supply "name" bands for the K street spot. Anything said about the Halstead band would be carrying the well-known coals to Newcastle. His broadcasting has made his name a household word. Renee Villon, international dancer, heads the Grove's current revue, supported by Franco and Faye, dance team; Roy Tracy, singing emmcee, and Kitty Simons.

The Crystal Bar at Maryland Club Gardens is completed—twice its former size. An "official" opening is in the wind, probably Friday. You can't miss seeing Brian Brown's mermaids on the walls—green ones, with silver hats, red tails and blue scales!

The Continental atmosphere is prevalent at Matt Windsor's Club Volga Boatman with the revue "Theatre Intime" holding the floor and Ivan Borisoff's murals. Theatre Intime boasts its own stage with scenery for each mood in the presentation. Two shows nightly—at 8:30 and 11:45.

Elsewhere on this page is a picture of Johnny Rice and his orchestra. They're a bright spot at Brinkley's (which also is a bright spot!) . . . Boulevard Farms is actually, not figuratively, reaping an autumn harvest Much of the food served at this suburban place, just below Alexandria, is grown on the property.

Have a preview, movie fans! Urv Levick, drummer-leader of Pete Macias' Heigh-Ho Club orchestra, got a bundle from the New York a day or two ago and immediately called the lads in to work. All afternoon they fooled around with sharps and flats and tempos and "take the second ending" and Monday night they burst forth with the new tunes from "The Big Broadcast of 1937." We recommend from this group "Talking Through My Heart." But you can ask for any tune from the show and you'll get it.

Don Rice, emmcee at La Paree, is going back for a return engagement at a Loew's house in New York City next week. He just finished an engagement at the Capitol there. Toma Ganero, d'Arbour, and Renee and the Long Sisters are the features of the floor show this wek. Al Sakol is emphasizing "sweet swing" orchestrations with the help of Honey Davis and Buddy Shaner on the vocalizings.

Service at Griffith farms begins at 11 a. m., which guarantees a delightful Indian summer landscape to those who go to the Marlboro pike spot before sundown. Bill Cassi and his orchestra for your dancing in the evenings.

Warners Hurry Production on Record Output

Thirteen Films Now Being Prepared in Company's Burbank Studios.

Continuing its high-gear production pace, the Warner Bros.-First National-Cosmopolitan Studio in Burbank is now at work on 13 productions.

Six of these films are before the cameras and the rest are in active preparation. When completed, the pictures will be shown in Washington at the Earle and Metropolitan theaters.

The six "shooting" are:

"Bad Man's Territory," with Dick Foran and Linda Perry.

"Desert Song," in Technicolor.

About the Showshops

IT APPEARS that "The Devil Is a Sissy" because he is a moral weakling and hasn't the stamina to meet the tough demands of right living and honest combat with the bitter problems of life. The thesis is that it takes a stronger man to go straight in the face of adversity than it does to go crooked, as the saying is.

BELL.

This was made clear yesterday afternoon in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange when a considerable audience of school and police department officials and the drama desks of the local press previewed one of the most engrossing pictures of the season.

"The Devil Is a Sissy" is a picture that utilizes the skillful services of three of the finest juvenile actors in Hollywood to point its lesson in how best to combat the threat of juvenile delinquency in those strata of society where parents seem incapable of exercising proper supervisory control over their children. The story is a closely knit and convincing one that never permits itself to grow maudlin or unduly melodramatic. The three lads in the pivotal roles, as you probably already know, are Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper and Mickey Rooney. Master Cooper has developed into a big strapping fellow who has rather outgrown the other two, but all three comport themselves in a manner that will add to their dramatic stature in the eyes of a discerning public.

The adult roles are played with no less skill by Ian Hunter, Dorothy Peterson, Peggy Conklin, Katharine Alexander, Gene Lockhart, Kathleen Lockhart, Jonathan Hale, who does an especially fine job as the sympathetic and understanding judge of the juvenile court; Etienne Girardot, Grant Mitchell, Harold Huber, who contributes such a fine character portrayal, along with Nino Martini and Leo Carrillo, to "The Gay Desperado," and Stanley Fields, who also appears in that picture.

But perhaps more notable than all this is the demonstration the picture affords that Woody S. Van Dyke can direct all types of film drama with equal facility and effectiveness. This subject is unlike anything Mr. Van Dyke has done before, except in the superlative excellence which it betrays in the handling of divergent characters in a story that swings from New York's slums to Park avenue and back again and deals with subject matter that only a sensitive and versatile nature could encompass with such realistic and believable results as have been achieved in this production.

"The Devil Is a Sissy" seems extremely likely to fulfill Division Manager Carter Barron's prophecy that when it opens on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday, it will prove one of the emotional thunderbolts of the year.

One feels an oppressive sense of guilt for having omitted mention of one of the evening's most baffling and intriguing elements of splendor from a review of "First Lady" written against the inexorable encroachments of a Monday midnight deadline. I mean the stunning costumes worn during the three acts of the play by Jane Cowl, its star. It is no part of a confirmed bachelor's foolhardiness to attempt any detailed description of these creations, and the Woman's Department is 'way over on the other side of the building, but I do know that to one who at least is aware of what he likes, Miss Cowl's toggery seemed the last word in the most advanced art of the couturier. And not the least noteworthy items of her gloriously becoming ensembles were the perky little hats with the cockeyed little feathers in them. This week at the National is going to be exceedingly tough on the pocketbooks of a lot of Washington husbands whose wives will want to look like Miss Cowl—which is a good trick, and a laudable ambition, even if you can't do it!

The Rialto Theater is looking for trouble!

Not content with the conflicting reactions of the audience to the Presidential campaign flashes embodied in the weekly newsreels, Mrs. Louise Noonan Miller and Manager Abe Tolkins have enlisted the co-operation of the national committees of the two major parties and will present both sides of the pre-election race by screening the official motion picture stories of the Democratic and Republican organizations. If this isn't dynamite, with party feeling running high, I don't know what is.

The two films will be shown as part of the bill beginning tomorrow at the Rialto. The principal screen feature will be "Six of a Kind," with Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth and Gracie Allen and George Burns.

In addition to showing the official party campaign pictures, the theater also will conduct a straw vote. Ballots will be provided and ballot boxes set up in the lobby.

The theater management wishes to stress the fact that it is strictly neutral in the matter, putting on this "stunt" purely as a topic of timely public interest.

With the premiere performance of its first production scheduled for tonight at Wardman Park, the newly organized Washington Civic Theater reports lively activity at the box office. Business at the theater's office in the Raleigh Hotel is brisk and continuous. The first night already is so near a sellout that the old S. R. O. sign is being dusted off. New patron and sustaining members of the Civic Theater include Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Rust, Mrs. Beale Howard, Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, Mrs. William McClellan and Mr. and Mrs. Lee D. Butler. Incidentally, in case you ever want to use it, the theater has a new and easily remembered telephone number—District 1600. That opening bill, by the way, is Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra."

Those aspiring resident Thespians who are not yet definitely allied with any special acting group still have a chance to catch on. Two sets of preliminary tryouts are on tap tonight.

The Pierce Hall Players will hold their second open tryout of the season, for "Grumpy," in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest, tonight at 8 o'clock. "Grumpy" will be recalled as one of Cyril Maude's greatest successes.

In the Somerset High School, Somerset, Md., the Montgomery Players tonight also are holding their second tryout of the season with a view to casting "Laburnum Grove," the J. B. Priestley play in which Edmund Gwenn introduced his splendid talents to American audiences.

Disputed Film Has Premiere At the Belasco

'Spring Shower,' Banned in Two States, Relates Tragic Story.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SPRING SHOWER," or "MARIE," DuWorld Pictures filmization of a story by Ilona Fullop, adapted to the screen by Paul Fejos, starring Annabelle, supported by Bela Eiben, Simone Helly and Germaine Aussey. Directed by Paul Fejos, with music by Vincent Scotto and L. Ausyel. Previewed in the Belasco Theater Sunday midnight, October 18.

A large audience of expectant amusement seekers—no doubt attracted, at least in part, by the fact that the film has been banned by the censors in both New York State and Pennsylvania—thronged to the Belasco Theater last evening to view the American premiere of the Hungarian screen play that bears the dual title of "Spring Shower" and "Marie."

Those who attended with the thought that there would be unreeled before them a gay and flamboyant sex play of frivolous metropolitan night life, quite obviously must have been hugely disappointed.

On the other hand, the more thoughtful members of the first-night audience who could find it possible to content themselves with an earnest, realistic and unremittingly somber and lachrymose recital of an unfortunate slavey's tragic experiences, must have found much in the picture to impress them with its sincerity and grim determination to paint a forceful canvas of meager existence in obscure Hungarian villages.

Not for the Masses.

"Spring Shower" is the life story of a beautiful young "hired girl," who is driven from pillar to post, poverty, degradation and death by the contumely heaped upon her by the village Puritans when she becomes the unwed mother of a baby daughter. Her pitiful career is traced through all manner of hardships. When her baby is taken from her by the town authorities, her mental and spiritual disintegradation is complete and she dies at the feet of the Madonna in the little church where she had taken her baby to be blessed. Such was the life of Marie.

The picture is made after the simplest of formulas and makes no essay at grandiose effects. It is a "class" production for those in quest of stark and forbidding realism and in no sense a picture that may be relied upon to provide amusement for the masses.

The final scene, in which Marie ascends to Heaven and begins scrubbing the kitchen's golden floors out of diamond-studded water buckets, is just a little grotesque. It is from this incident that the picture derives its primary title. When Marie peers down to earth and sees her 16-year-old daughter about to surrender to the blandishments of the same man who had ruined her own life, she pours bucket after bucketful of water down upon them, thus causing the spring shower that saves the girl from the sinister advances of her own unknown father.

Cast and Auxiliaries.

Annabella, who plays the title role, is a competent actress whose abilities are seriously curtailed by the slow pace at which the gloomy episodes of the story are played. She is supported by Bela Eiben, as the village Lothario; Simone Helly, as the proprietress of the brothel where Marie, as serving maid, finds the only kindness she ever has known, and Germaine Auessey, who, from time to time, interpolates songs into the play's developments.

Foremost among the supplementary features of the bill is that classic short-reel subject, "Frankie and Johnny," costarring the eminent Charles Laughton and his wife, Elsa Lanchester. Added short subjects and the Fox Movietone News further augment a feature not quite gaited to American tastes.

The Cinema's Three Muskideers!

When "The Devil Is a Sissy" comes to the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday these three youthful stars will be seen in the principal roles. They are, beginning at upper left and reading around the clock, Mickey Rooney, Jackie Cooper and Freddie Bartholomew. Each has more than one fine performance to his credit—Mickey's Puck in "Midsummer Night's Dream," Jackie's numerous hits with Wallace Beery and Freddie's "David Copperfield" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy"—but this is the first time they will have been seen in the same picture.

Film Memories.

Hollywood, Oct. 20.—When Jean Harlow movie-bowed in a two-reel comedy clad only in black lace nearnothings. Next day came an imperative wire from mamma Harlow to quit. When Herbert Brenon, discouraged with directing Betty Bronson in a "Peter Pan" scene, sank to his knees and besought the heavens, "Oh, God, why did you give me all the brains?"

JEAN HARLOW.

When Benny Fields borrowed $200 to get himself and wife back to New York. Today his screen and radio work is netting him about $5,000 weekly. When Bette Davis was released by Universal because Carl Laemmle said she had no sex appeal, and called her "the little brown wren." The wren has come to life.

When Kay Francis, playing her first picture bit in a circus story, wore tights which suddenly ripped. When Cecil B. De Mille created a movie set on which decorations were made of real candy—and 450 extras went home ill.

When Michael Arlen, the author, refused a contract because the same studio employed Richard Arlen, (whose real name is Van Mattimore) and Michael termed Dick an imposter. It was a laugh, because Arlen is not Michael's real name either. When Wallace Beery was bitten by a dog-actor in one of the old Beery-Raymond Hatton comedies. In a fit of anger, Beery made news—he bit the dog.

Here is a Greta Garbo chuckle. It happened months ago, but has not been told. Director W. S. Van Dyke was asked to make retakes of a Garbo picture; it was his first experience with her. Now "Woody" directs rapidly, while Greta is accustomed to working slowly, shooting the same scene over and over. There came a sequence for which she was to run down a flight of stairs and out a doorway. Without rehearsal, Van Dyke said, "Let's try it!" and Garbo floated down the steps, through the door.

Within the minute she returned to the set, to find the director changing cameras for another scene. Garbo eyed him in amazement, then smiled and shrugged her shoulders. "Vell," she muttered, "I guess dere is only vun vay to come down stairs."

Bing Crosby habitually wears a dirty old cap that has been in his possession fully ten years. At best I would never call the Crooner well-dressed, primarily because he becomes attached to old clothes. Dixie Lee Crosby plays a regular hide-and-seek game with him; piece by piece she sneaks coats with shiny backs and shoes with scuffed toes to the old-clothes man. But she cannot lose that cap.

The Groaner carelessly left it on a studio set one day, and a property man, mistaking it for something the cat dragged in, tossed it into a trash can to be carted away. Bing very nearly tore down the studio searching for that cap, and refused to work until it was found (as at last it was, just two seconds before it would have gone into an incinerator).

Dixie said to me the other evening, "Some day I expect to see Bing in a John Hix 'Strange as It Seems' cartoon, titled 'Man who has worn same cap for 50 years.'"

An Odyssey of Moving Picture Actors Moving

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Oct. 20.—Real estate hustlers are reported overworking the "reflected film glory" bait on susceptible prospective tenants again.

Bait No. 1 is none other than Greta Garbo. If you've a yen to live in a house once inhabited by the secretive Swede, most any agent will show you half a dozen.

Groucho Marx claims the record. During his last house-hunting expedition, eight rental agents showed him 23 shanties guaranteed to have been lived in by Garbo, the great. As a matter of record, the lass has occupied just seven Hollywood houses in ten years.

The same record seemed to show domestic meanderings of film players are practically a round-robin affair. As one moves out another whizzes in.

For example La Garbo is currently living in the house Jeanette MacDonald recently vacated. MacDonald succeeded Neil Hamilton in the place.

One of the first Garbo huts was later rented to Gertrude Michael, soon followed by Bette Davis. Irvin S. Cobb owns it now. Carl Brisson lived in a Garbo house in which Clara Bow was an intermediate tenant.

Maureen O'Sullivan and her new husband, John Farrow, followed the Basil Rathbones into a home originally built by Marie Prevost, who later had Garbo for a tenant.

The round-robin feature isn't confined to Garbo garrets. Elizabeth Allen has just moved back into the first apartment she occupied in Hollywood. Since her first reign it has housed Maureen O'Sullivan, Winifred Shotter, Charles Laughton and Frances Drake.

Patricia Ellis took over Jean Parker's former place; Tom Brown moved in as Madge Evans moved out; Rosalind Russell succeeded Douglas MacLean in another house; Alice Faye rents a former Rochelle Hudson house and Louise Rainer's home was formerly the lair of Marlene Dietrich.

Just why players shuttle back and forth among houses rented other players isn't at once apparent. Seems improbable the reason has anything to do with a sign once displayed by an exclusive Beverly Hills apartment house:

"Dogs and movie actors not allowed."

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

"Without exception the world's greatest player and teacher," Ely Culbertson says.

A Neat Escape.

Expert defenders have such healthy respect for and fear of elimination and throw-in plays that they invariably take every precaution against being the victim of this maneuver. In today's hand, West performed a very neat escape trick.

Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 Club	1 Heart	Pass	Pass
Double	Pass	2 Clubs	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Needless to say, South overbid; his takeout double of one heart was correct, but when his partner could do no more than bid two clubs South had to be very optimistic to hope for game. But it is probable, nevertheless, that he would have "gotten away with it" against a less skillful defender than West.

The fourth highest heart was West's opening lead. Declarer won and saw that a great deal of luck would be necessary if nine tricks were to be brought home. On the wild hope that he would find the King of clubs only singly guarded in the East hand (since dummy had only one entry, there could be only one club lead through), he entered the dummy with the Ace of diamonds, and took a club finesse. When the ten held, the Ace was laid down. To declarer's disappointment, West failed to follow, dicarding a heart. Because he could think of no other trick-taking possibilities declarer proceeded with his club establishment, leading a third round. Again West discarded a heart, and East won with the King, returning a low spade. Declarer now had a glimmer of hope; he went up with the Ace and cashed his last club, and West made his third heart discard on this trick. The declarer now attempted to throw West on lead by laying down the King and a small diamond, but West had carefully preserved his diamonds against this very eventuality. On the King, he threw, not a low one, but the Queen, and now instead of being forced to play from his Queen of spades (after cashing the Ace and King of hearts) West stayed off the lead entirely. East won, cashed his good diamond and returned another spade, which effectively spiked declarer's guns.

It should be noted that had West failed to hold on to all of his diamonds, or had he failed to unblock the Queen, nine tricks would have been a simple matter for the declarer.

The Kansan stood up to respond with a waving hat to the applause of Pasadena spectators, lining the streets. Once in Los Angeles, the parade of more than 50 automobiles went up Broadway under banners fluttering a "welcome Gov. Landon."

Sidewalks were jammed. At times thec row'd forced its way within touching distance of Landon's car, showering him with confetti. Boos and shouts of "Hurray for Roosevelt" mingled with the applause and cheers as Landon rode to his hotel.

After resting briefly in his suite, Landon greeted a large crowd of supporters and party workers in the hotel ballroom, saying:

"Hope you all will be out to the meeting tonight and bring your friends. I've heard many encouraging reports from this section during the past two or three weeks. Thank you very much."

Praises CCC.

Early today, speaking at Barstow, Calif., Gov. Landon praised the Civilian Conservation Corps and pledged himself to remove "the politicians (who) have taken over the administrative jobs."

Declaring "the present Administration has forgotten the original purpose of the CCC," the Republican nominee asserted "it is threatening to lead the several hundred thousand young Americans comprising the corps down a blind alley."

Landon said the CCC could be made "far more effective" by adoption of an educational program fitting the members for "places in private life," and by giving "full opportunity for davancement" under the merit system to "the CCC boys themselves."

Landon planned to leave Los Angeles for the East at 9:30 a. m. (P. S. T) tomorrow. The first scheduled stop is Phoenix, Ariz., at 9:30 p. m.

St. Paul Players

"HOLIDAY." The Saint Paul's Players present the drama in three acts by Philip Barry, directed by Arthur S. Harvey, jr., with settings by John Meininger. In Saint Paul's Academy auditorium, October 20 and 21. Reviewed Tuesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

With Philip Barry's study of the philosophies of life, "Holiday," the St. Paul's Players commendably opened their season last evening. Nicely cast, with the proper eye to the right person in the right role, they read the Barry lines smoothly and interpreted the various types well.

Clarence Donohoe made his Johnny Case stand in high relief to Joseph Haltigan's delineation of the money-grubbing millionaire. Eleanor Freund's quiet Linda also stood in fine contrast to Charlotte Knott's gold-digging Julia.

Others in the company included John Meininger, as the girls' imbibing brother; Jack Connell, Mary Catherine Connell, Richard Finnin and Margaret Collins, with Joseph Reynolds and Eugenie MacDonald as the domestics.

While the production lacked a certain degree of professional, or even semiprofessional, finesse, the Players are to be congratulated on their intelligent work.

Services Today For Mrs. Kaiser

Funeral services for Mrs. Laura Kaiser, 73, will be held at 2 p. m. today at Gawler's chapel, 1756 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Mrs. Kaiser, a former Washington resident and widow of Edward L. Kaiser, died Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Howard B. Hosmer, at Lawrence, Long Island. She lived in Washington until about 15 years ago.

Surviving, besides Mrs. Hosmer, are another daughter, Mrs. Clayton D. McKinley, of Rockville Center, Long Island; three sisters, Miss Elizabeth B. Hart, of 1706 Connecticut avenue northwest; Miss Bertha Hart, of 1740 Park road northwest, and Mrs. Ida Boyne, of 2426 Nineteenth street northwest. She also leaves five grandchildren.

New Deal Fails To Keep Faith, Davis Declares

word. It has no just claim, simply because of party membership, on the support of any Democrat."

He said a Democrat who disagrees with the policies of the Roosevelt Administration finds himself facing "a painful dilemma."

"There is no pleasure for him in criticizing acts done in the name of his party," he declared, "no matter how profound his dissent, especially a party to which he has given the service of a lifetime. He is not likely to agree with all that is put out by any other party now in the field.

"If he remains silent, however, he takes the chance of being charged with acquiescence and of waking up to find that the Democratic Party has permanently changed its color and that the New Deal has become an accepted expression of the Democratic faith.

"If he fails to protest now, his time for protest may never come. What can he do, therefore, but stand up, speak up, and on election day take his judgment and his conscience with him into the polling place and make his protest good?"

Cites His Party Recognition.

At the outset of his speech Davis said he was undertaking to explain his position to the public because the recognition given him by the party in the past made it impossible for him to "remain entirely silent in the present campaign."

"I am speaking tonight primarily as a Democrat," he said, "but since I am an American even before I am a Democrat, I must, if I speak at all, speak the truth as I see it without fear and without evasion."

He then outlined the traditional policies of the Democratic Party, adding that since 1932 "in some mysterious way the whole course and direction of our party seems to have changed."

"The platform of 1932 was put on the shelf to lie there as an interesting exhibit in the political museum," he said. "New departure followed upon new departure; new experiment piled upon new experiment; each apparently without any consideration of its legal soundness, its lasting effect, or its bearing upon any of its fellows.

Recalls New Deal Laws.

"These things we have lived to see:

"1. A whole series of laws passed in violation of constitutional provisions—'No matter how reasonable the doubts as to their constitutionality.'

"2. The surrender by Congress at the demand of the President of its constitutional power and duty to make and declare the laws, to regulate the value of money, to levy and collect taxes and disburse the proceeds thereof.

"3. The appropriation with a carefree hand of billions of public money to be spent not as Congress should have directed but in such fashion and to such ends as suited the Executive pleasure—the only visible criterion being that the money should be spent with the maximum of haste and the minimum of deliberation and not always without an eye to political results.

"4. The repudiation of the terms of payment in Government bonds; and after the Supreme Court had declared the repudiation to be unlawful, giving the right to sue for damages to any who were injured, the passing of a law shutting the courts to the injured citizen.

"5. Economy treated as a vice and not as a virtue; funds raised by taxation and borrowing wastefully spent and then re-borrowed, with each new promise of a balanced budget sounding more hollow and distant than the last.

Says Pay Roll Swollen.

"6. The public pay roll swollen by the addition of tens of thousands of new employes, not only in the extraordinary agencies (so-called) but in the regular establishment as well.

"7. A mounting burden of taxation both direct and indirect, corresponding to an ever mounting expenditure.

"8. The Federal Government entering the field of private enterprise and engaging in open and destructive competition with its citizens;

"9. A persistent and unremitting effort to bring the entire economic and social life of the country under the centralized control and regimentation of the Federal Government and its Washington bureaus.

"10. To this end, the building up of a series of controls which the President himself declares would provide shackles for the liberties of the people if they fell into the wrong hands, and finally;

"11. Both by direct appeal and subtle suggestion the flames of class feeling, class hatred, and class cupidity steadily, industriously and dangerously fanned."

Davis said he was willing to give "the President and his advisers all the credit for good intentions that their most ardent supporters can claim, but when public men and public measures come on to be weighed, it is the wisdom and justice of what has been done that must turn the scales and not mere good intentions."

Calls for Oath's Observance.

Expanding on what he termed "disregard of the Constitution" by the Roosevelt Administration, he said those who take an oath to "preserve, protect and defend" the Constitution "ought to keep it."

"It cannot be evaded or whittled away on the plea of some newfound and latter-day wisdom," he asserted. "If the Democratic Party today had the courage of its past, it would be the champion and not the critic of the Constitution. • • •

"Every legitimate reform can be wrought out within the structure of the Constitution by the machinery it provides. But the very life of the Nation demands that the Constitution shall be obeyed. It has not been obeyed, either in letter or in spirit during the last three years. It will never be obeyed by the men who seek, in pursuit of greater power and glory, to centralize in their own hands at Washington dominion over the economic, industrial and social life of the continent."

Referring to the President's message to Congress in 1935 in which he advocated taxation which would encourage "a wider distribution of wealth," Davis said:

"No Democrat, I suppose, would challenge the principle that taxes should be laid in proportion to the ability to pay. Certainly I would not. • • • But to take from one solely that it may be given to another has been well described by the Supreme Court as 'nonetheless robbery because it is done under the law and called taxation.

Assails Distributive Tax.

"Taxation for distributive, as distinct from governmental, purposes, is as foreign an intruder into the body of democratic or American doctrine as the expropriation of all property under a communistic regime. It is communism in all but name. The difference is one of degree only, not of principle."

He had this to say about unemployment relief:

"Surely this is neither humanitarian nor democratic nor American to indoctrinate the people of the United States with the idea that it is the duty of the Government to support the citizen, rather than the duty of the citizen to support the Government.

"Yet, who can fail to see that under the New Deal and largely by reason of the unwise and spendthrift way in which it has administered relief direct from Washington, there is growing in the country a fixed conviction that every man, idle or industrious, incompetent or useful, rebellious or willing, has a vested right to Government support?

"There is something radically wrong when expenditures for relief keep going up while the depression fades away. And when we hear campaign appeals being made, as they are being made today in this State and that, on the ground that the New Deal has spent within the borders of the State ten times as much as the State has returned in Federal taxes, there is an unpleasant feeling that this is not so much like humanitarianism as it is like bribery of the voters."

He also criticized President Roosevelt's speeches in which business recovery was emphasized, declaring that "when great issues of Government are at stake, great questions of right and wrong, justice and injustice in the balance, they ought not to be decided by pointing to carloadings, or stock quotations, or the up and down of bank deposits."

"Whether business is better today than it was yesterday, or will be better or worse tomorrow than it is today," he said, "is a poor guide for people who are called upon to decide what sort of Government they want to live under both today an dtomorrow and for the long days after that. If they found their Government on the shifting sands of unsound principle, it will make no lasting difference whther business is good or bad."

The Black Automatic

By William Byron Mowery.

CHAPTER 16.

Perhaps Jimmy had found a placer prize and started working it, and then, unable to fight off that pack single-handed, he had whipped South for "help and a partner."

But this placer theory, food as it looked on the surface, held stumbling blocks as big as mountains. There was nothing illegal about finding a gold placer; and Jimmy had flatly stated that his work was a penitentiary offense. And why should a person keep a mining prize a secret, except just long enough to get his friends in on the ground floor? In this particular instance secrecy clashed with common sense. If Jimmy had struck any prize rich enough to account for his fight with those men, surely he or any other sane person would have staked and filed instantly. By that simple easy act he would not only have clinched his ownership, but secured protection against those killers and put the whole might of the law behind himself.

"A bit of a stumper, this proposition," Noel mused, completely mystified. "I hope that those fellows kindly let me live long enough to find out what Jimmy did have up his sleeve. I'm curious."

As he was straightening up the books on the desk, he heard a footstep on the gravel outside, the door opened unexpectedly, and Harla stepped upon the threshold.

Though he nooded "Good morning" and calmly went on with his straightening up, Noel swore at his unlucky turn. Harla of all people, catching him here! He had come early to avoid just that. Now there she stood.

"What Are You Doing Here?"

One glance told him that she had slept little or none in the five hours since coming ashore. Her hand on the door latch trembled; her eyes betrayed that she had been crying; her whole manner showed that she was torn with anguish about Jimmy. She had come 4,000 miles to meet him, and he was gone. Almost a month ago he had dropped out of sight, and no one had seen or heard of him since.

"What are you doing here?" she demanded, her tones sharp with suspicion.

"I came to get a book," Noel said quietly. He picked up a weather guide in which during his search he had noticed Strap Barclay's name. "Strap told me to get this if I wanted it. It's his."

"Let me see that!" She came across, opened the manual to the flyleaf and glanced at Strap's name there. "It—it is his. But did it take you half an hour to step in here and get a book? I saw you come up the slope."

"I started to air this place out and tidy it up a bit," Noel explained, gentle with her, pitying her profoundly. "It was pretty stuffy, and this young fellow may be back any time; so I thought——"

"Do you know him?"

"Not personally. Just from what Strap said about him."

"Then how do you know he'll be back? Where is he?"

Noel hated to stir an empty hope in her, a hope which could never come true this side of eternity; but there was no help for it. He had to lull her suspicions and shield her from the truth—if he could.

"I don't know where he is," he said, "except that he's off on one of his trips. He's often gone a month or more, Strap told me. Especially during the open season, like this. But he'll be blowing in one of these days."

Harla's eyes lighted up at this picture of Jimmy dropping down upon Manitou. But only for a moment. As she glanced at the clothes on the floor, at the dishes and other signs of hasty abandonment, her anguish came flooding back. And along with it came that suspicion which had been born in her at her first glimpse of the Diomede, on the Clearwater pier.

As Noel met her gaze across the desk he realized that in her heart she was secretly charging him with Jimmy's disappearance. For the past fortnight suspicion had preyed on her till now she believed that he was one of Jimmy's enemies and knew what had happened to her brother. But still she had no absolute proof. That Diomede, her one means of linking the to Jimmy, was sinking into the ooze of the Grand Marais, a thousand miles away.

With a visible effort she pulled herself together. "You needn't bother to straighten up this cabin. Alice and I—he and Alice are friends."

"All right," Noel agreed. He picked up the manual and walked over to the door.

As he stepped outside he debated whether or not to warn Harla about Flood. She sought to stay strictly within the post clearing during the daytime and within Alice's cabin while the twilight was on. She was so harassed about Jimmy that she was stone blind to her own danger.

But he was loath to pile another worry on her shoulders when she was so distracted already. Likely she wouldn't heed his warning, anyway. If any guarding was done he himself would have to do it.

Passing the open window he glanced inside the cabin. Harla's fantastic suspicion had made him impatient and a little angry, but as he looked through that window all his anger fled. Harla had picked up Jimmy's clothes and started to fold the crumpled blankets. But there she had stopped. Slumped down at the couch, with her face buried in her arms, she had broken into tears—as though she somehow knew that she had come too late to Manitou.

Back at the way-cabin, while he cooked some carbou jerky and brewed a pan of coffee, Noel decided to write a letter. As things stood too dreadfully much depended upon himself, upon his keeping alive. If that pack should kill him and he did not know what hour or minute it might come—this hunt would stop, Jimmy would go unavenged, and Harla would be alone here, utterly defenseless.

And there was Herm Spencer to think about, too. Herm's stolen vacation would end within a few weeks. If he came back to duty with nothing to show for his time and expense money, Superintendent Ostrand would either kick him off the force or bust him.

A letter to Spencer at this particular juncture would not only safeguard the veteran sergeant but kill several other birds at one shot.

With a mug of coffee at his elbow he sat at the table and wrote a long code message to Herm Spencer, telling the sergeant everything about this hunt about Harla, Flood, and Jimmy. He wrote in conclusion:

"If you do not have a wireless from me by the time you receive this letter, it means that I'm out of the picture and that it's up to you and the squad to finish this job. Select five or six of our best men and get down here on the jump. If Harla is gone, nail Flood and take any necessary measures to make him talk. NOEL."

The letter made him feel betted. If he got humped now, Harla would have an anchor to windward. Spencer would be protected, and these men would pay for that brutal murder in Winnipeg. Armed with the data and advice of this message, Spencer could sift into the north with a picked squad and polish off this outfit.

When he came back from the H-B store, where he unobtrusively posted his letter, he encountered a somewhat comic spectacle in front of the way-cabin. Alice Wentworth had come down there to see him; and an Indian cracky, a vicious yellow brute with a strain of wolf in it, had sprung at her and "treed" her on a granite boulder a few yars from the door.

As Noel met her gaze across the

Two Detectives Found Guilty Of Gun Loans

Police Board Recommends Officers Be Warned for Violating Rule.

Detective Sergt. A. D. Mansfield and Precinct Detective Elmer L. Dalstrom, accused of loaning revolvers to two civilians, were found guilty by the Police Trial Board yesterday.

The board sent its decision to the District Commissioners, recommending both men be warned.

According to testimony, the guns were loaned to John and Logan Wilton, twin brothers. Mansfield the board was told, gave one of the men a weapon during the Shrine convention, when both brothers were appointed as special officers. Dalstrom's loan was made August 22, according to records.

The brothers, according to testimony, failed to return the weapons and were later arrested and charged with carrying concealed weapons and impersonating officers.

The board held that the detectives "loaned a certain gun to Logan and John Wilton and as a result of the loan these men were arrested and charged with carrying concealed weapons and impersonating officers."

In another case, Policeman C. E. Hansboro, attached to the Fourth Precinct, was recommended for dismissal from the force after he was found guilty of desertion and making a false statement to a superior officer. Hansboro did not appear to offer a defense.

Tumulty Appoints Chest Drive Aids

Joseph P. Tumulty, chairman of the special assignment unit in this year's Community Chest campaign, has completed his selection of team captains, he reported yesterday to Coleman Jennings, campaign chairman. The unit solicits contributions of $500 or more and generally starts its campaign ten days or two weeks before the official opening of the regular drive.

The organization of the unit varies somewhat from that of former years in that Tumulty has selected two vice chairmen instead of one. Richard W. Hynson, veteran campaigner with this unit, and Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, active in welfare work, are the vice chairmen.

Team captains are: Harold N. Marsh, P. O. Coffin, Mrs. Fedora Lewis, Wilson Compton, F. Moran McConihe, Frederick Bradley, James E. Colliflower, Mrs. Sidney F. Taliaferro and Hilleary G. Hoskinson.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Don't ever try to tell Bob Wickes any jokes—has been keeping a book, all arranged in alphabetical order, with numerous versions of each joke. One poor soul told an amusing story and settled back to enjoy the applause. Instead, Bob took himself off, returned with his book and said: "And here is another one about the same two people——" Thus his now-famous book came to light.

While here, the Mexican team members were given a large car especially for their own private use. Capt. Armado Villarreal has been behind the wheel most of the time. When not going over the jumps at Fort Myer these visitors were apt to be off on motor trips over the countryside.

The Howard Foleys—she was Virginia Dudley of opera fame—were having cocktails at El Patio the other afternoon and hugely enjoying some recently-heard yarn.

Welcome home! Even if only for a short time. Gen. and Mrs. Will E. Gilmore are back in town while he makes some preliminary arrangements for the fair to be given in San Francisco in 1939. They are being received with open arms by their many service friends and the Cave Dwellers who knew them when stationed here some time back with the Air Corps.

Kay Pearson is one of the most widely traveled persons we know. Not content to participate in the round of gaiety here she is going out of town. This week-end she will go to the University of Virginia for the prom and the following week-end will find her and Maria Whitehurst up at Harvard.

Kay has a very clever Irish terrier, Ginger. A neighbor of the Pearsons has a small dog which is kept in a spacious yard. The gate opens inward, so the small canine cannot open it himself. But—he and Ginger have struck up a friendship and every morning at about the same time, Ginger trots down the street and around the corner, pushes open the barrier, awaits his cronie and together they start off in search of adventure.

Adolfo Paez much prefers music with a pinch of Latin rhythm in it—and why shouldn't he, coming from Ecuador? Yesterday, when he was out tea dancing with a young lady, who was costumed in chic black severity, the orchestra chanced to hit up a popular melody peppered with castanets and gourds. The pair did not wait for a second invitation from the musicians but were right out on the floor making the most of it before the rest of the tea-ers decided to leave their tables.

When one turns the pages to styles of other years, there is always an amused smile—or should be—(just imagine strolling down F street in a hobble skirt, or a bustle costume) and yet when we see modified versions of them, we are highly in favor of it. Barbara Bonnycastle has just such an outfit. The frock, quite le dernier cri, is black crepe, but the neck treatment harks back to other times. There is a high cravat of cream net that doubles over in the front and cascades down the front in a graceful jabot that would have warmed the cockles of George Washington's heart.

The J. Clinton Tribbys are again in town after several weeks spent in Newport—no, not seeing the close of the season, because this happens to be Newport, Ark., a delightful little Southern town that every one should visit sometime. They usually motor everywhere they go, but this time, knowing the mountains of Virginia and Tennessee would be ablaze in their autumn splendor, Mrs. Tribby couldn't think of letting Mr. T. miss the glorious scenes, because of "eyes on the road ahead"—so they went by rail. Another good argument for the railroad. Mrs. T. is to be here just long enough (not one minute longer) to collect her winter wardrobe, then she will depart for New York and the household of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Halliday.

Louis Beans Home After Western Trip

Couple Attends Ball in Omaha; Visits Senator Burke.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis C. Bean have returned to Washington after an extended motor trip through Midwestern States and are now living in the Altamont Apartments, Wyoming avenue. While in Omaha, Mr. and Mrs. Bean were guests of Mrs. Bean's parents, Senator and Mrs. Edward R. Burke, and attended a coronation ball given by the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben.

Miss Barbara Burke, Mrs. Bean's sister, as Princess Omaha, took part in the ceremonies incident to the coronation of King and Queen Ak-Sar-Ben XLII. Following the ball a supper party was given in her honor.

Earl A. Columbus Married in Md.

Mr. and Mrs. Feodor Michalewich, of Staten Island, N. Y., announce the marriage of their daughter, Anne Theodora, to Mr. Earl Alexander Coale Columbus, son of Mrs. Columbus and the late Mr. Alexander Coale Columbus, of Washington, which took place at Trinity Church in Annapolis, Md. on October 17. The rector, the Rev. Mr. Paul R. Diehl, performed the ceremony and the couple was attended by Miss Madeline Groome and Mr. James Duncan Sayers.

Miss Dorothy Highfield, who was to have given a luncheon November 12 for Miss Bette Hartz, another debutante of the season, has postponed the party to November 21. Miss Hartz is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Barge Hartz.

Mrs. Robert Highfield will entertain at a luncheon at the Shoreham today.

Her guests will include Mrs. W. W. Howes, wife of the Acting Postmaster General; Mrs. Newton Brewer, Mrs. Neitah King, Mrs. Justine Macklin, Mrs. E. Lavalle Koss and Mrs. Charles M. Trammell, Mrs. Henry Heine, Mrs Consuelo A. Saeone, Mrs. Jack Hollowell, Mrs. Dwight Galt, Mrs. Charles Wright, Mrs. Abner Drury and Mrs. Edward S. Society to See Opening Events Of Horse Show

Miss Castanedo Chairman of Girls' Group Selling Programs.

Diplomatic and official society of Washington will gather at the Meadowbrook Show Grounds at 2 p. m. tomorrow for the opening of the Inter-American Horse Show. The Third mounted band and 10th Cavalry from Fort Myer will participate in a colorful ceremony preceding the preliminary event.

The opening salute tomorrow, which has been designated as Virginia day, will be accorded to Dr. E. T. Trice, of Richmond, official representative of Gov. Peery, and the military team salute will be given the Ambassador of Chile, Dr. Don Manuel Trucco.

Standards with the flags of Chile, Mexico and the United States have been erected on the show grounds so spectators may know each day from the flag shown at the finish of the military team jumping event which is the winner.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'How to Handle Situation?' Asks Woman in Thirties Whose Steady Beau Is Quarrelsome.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We are in our late thirties. Have been going together five years, with talk of marriage in the indefinite future. The stumbling block seems to be the fact that we have numerous misunderstandings. No matter how hard I try to avoid unpleasantness I seem to do things that irritate him. The first few months we went together everything I did was perfect. Now I am criticized for the very things that at one time I was applauded for.

• • • •

I am always the one to make the first move to make up, otherwise the silence would be of indefinite length. I know, for I have waited weeks before making the gesture. This hasn't been easy to do. Each time he grumbles about patching things up, but in the end seems pleased and insists he loves me, but says when he gets angry at me he can't help saying things that hurt me.

• • • •

However, each time it seems more difficult to smooth things over and where at one time I really felt he loved me and couldn't help these outbursts, now there seems to be a doubt creeping into my mind. How would you handle this situation?—Very truly yours, UNCERTAIN.

Don't Be Propitiatory.

DEAR UNCERTAIN: The only way to handle this situation is to demonstrate conclusively to the man that he can't treat you as a doormat and get away with it. Every time he makes you the butt of cruelly critical and disparaging remarks, and finds you willing to make the first overtures leading to a renewal of lovemaking, his respect for you slips a few inches lower. Such a man accepts a woman at the same evaluation she puts on herself. Her desirability in his eyes is concomitant to her unattainability.

• • • •

It has been said that a good offensive is the best defensive. Rather than try to defend yourself against his barrage of criticism in future, try a counter-barrage against him. Prepare yourself against that day by holding him up in your own mind to objective inspection and analysis. If he is rude, impatient, trigger-tempered, unfair, given to unwarranted sulking—in short, a trial to even the kindest of women, tell him so in no uncertain terms. Give him to understand that if he thinks he has much to bear in tolerating your human frailties and idiosyncrasies, you have even more to bear in putting up with his—and that you are getting just as weary of the nerve-wracking situation as he is. Tell him, the next time he promotes a quarrel, that you have made first overtures for the last time, and if ever he wishes to see you again, or resume his courtship of you, he will have to apologize for his fault-finding and give you some reasonable guarantee that he will put a bridle on his tempers in future.

• • • •

Don't lay any emphasis on the fact that you have begun to doubt the quality of his love for you. Carry the battle into his camp by saying that you have begun to wonder whether you ever have loved him or ever could; that he is revealing himself to be quite a different person from the man you first supposed him to be.

• • • •

If you don't care to be drawn into an exchange of personalities—and I will admit it is a painful and oftentimes profitless exchange—you might, as an alternative, just tell him wearily that you have had enough of that sort of thing the next time he starts quarreling with you. If he is at your home, ask him with quiet finality to leave and not come back again ever, unless he can come back with a permanently changed attitude of mind toward you and toward the relationship. If the quarrel starts when you are away from home, pick up your things in a leisurely fashion, tell him this is good-by for the last time and walk away.

• • • •

Whatever program you adopt, don't ever let him place you on the defensive again. Even though you may suppose now that it will break your heart to give him up, remember that your heart will mend in time; that as things are going now he probably never will wish to marry you; and that if you ever hope to win an ardent proposal of marriage from him, you must first bring him face to face with his urgent need of claiming you on terms which are more of your making than his. M. H.

New Shades Stand Out In Patou Collection

Paris (U.P.).—Two new shades stand out in Jean Patou's collection—Arbois red, which is a soft wine shade, and smoke blue, which is a shade between gray and blue. These shades are shown alone or in combination for dinner and evening wear.

One in smoke blue satin is made with a surplice waist where bands of the satin cross to form the bodice, then cross again to a crushed band at the waist. Arbois red is used for an evening coat made with a long full skirt and trimmed at the neck with silver fox.

Mother Solves Proper Dress Through Chart

By Margaret Wallace.

WHAT TO WEAR and when and where in Washington is an ever pertinent question. In a city where there is so much entertaining, both formal and informal, it is often difficult to remember just what is proper for every occasion.

One mother who has solved the problem for her family has written the following letter, which may be of interest to our readers.

DEAR MISS WALLACE:

My family always turns to me for advice on what to wear, even my husband, so I have had the following clothes guide typed and tacked up in the rooms of my husband, my son and my daughter. It is as follows:

For informal day time, morning, school, office, matinee, shopping and walking.

Women: Tailored suit or street dress, semi-sport or simple afternoon dress. A smart hat to go with the costume. Very little jewelry. Nice looking accessories.

For formal afternoon (weddings, luncheon, teas or the theater).

Women: Modish suit, afternoon dress or suit, dress and fur coat or fur-trimmed coat. Hat to match, white or light gloves and a little jewelry.

Men: Cut-away coat with striped trousers, white shirt with plain or plaited bosom, wing collar with bow or four-in-hand tie, high hat, gray gloves and black shoes. If less formal clothes are worn, a derby hat is proper. If a business suit is selected, it must be dark and worn with a white shirt and black shoes.

For informal evening (theater, night club, dinner, buffet supper, restaurant or wedding).

Women: Dinner dress or "Sunday night" dress, an evening wrap without a hat. For a church wedding, a hat should be worn and a long dress with a higher neckline and sleeves. A hat may also be worn for a restaurant or the theater.

For formal evening (dinner, balls, theater parties, receptions, formal suppers, etc.

Women: Evening dress or very handsome dinner dress, no hat, jewels, etc.

Men: Full dress, single or double breasted white vest, white shirt, wing collar and white tie. Dark overcoat, white gloves and black shoes. Cuff links and studs may be handsome.

This same mother has a list of "dont's" which include:

Don't wear a sport coat over a dinner or Sunday night dress.

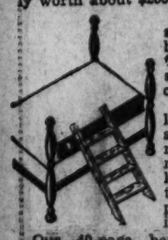
How to Know Furniture

THEODORE LITTLE, glancing at illustrations in a book, said, "Why, we have six old chairs like this one described upstairs in the attic." And those old chairs turned out to be genuine Chippendale and actually worth about $200 each.



There is absorbing romance behind many furniture designs that you can easily know.

It's easy to learn the names, styles and periods of the many different kinds of furniture and how to place each one in your home.

Our 40-page booklet describes the various styles of furniture, as William and Mary, Jacobean, Italian, Duncan Phyfe, Modern Queen Anne. With its help you will be able to buy more wisely or to rearrange your present furniture in an artistic, pleasing and restful way.

You will learn that "camel back" means a chair back with the top rail humped in the center like a camel's back. "Pie-crust" is the edge of a round tip-top table, raised, scalloped and fluted. "Spool bed" means head and footboard made in imitation of old spools which bulged in the middle. Of course, you want to know a lot about furniture and interior decoration and this new 40-page booklet, "Furniture Styles," will give you just the information you require.

Send 15c for our booklet, "Furniture Styles," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West 19th Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Yvonne Kushner Assigned Feminine Lead in Civic Theater.

IT IS A BIT startling, perhaps, to hear innocence called the greatest charm of Cleopatra, the eternal symbol of the siren, but in the opinion of Yvonne Kushner, who is playing the role of Cleopatra for the Washington Civic Theater this week, it was innocense that intrigued the great Julius Caesar.

It must be noted, of course, that the Cleopatra whom Bernard Shaw depicts in his comedy, "Caesar and Cleopatra," is quite an unusual Cleopatra. As he saw her and as Mrs. Kushner will play her, she was just a child of 16, naive, elfish, unpredictable, but far from the queen she was later to become.

Mrs. Kushner believes that it was the childish quality that drew Caesar to the young queen, for in Rome he had been pursued by women without number, all scheming to win his affections because of the power that it might bring to them. Shaw's Cleopatra called him an "old man" and laughed at him, but she was afraid of him at first and later in awe of him, and such flattery was very welcome.

Iris March a Favorite.

An actress of wide professional experience, Mrs. Kushner has played a number of famous women, all noted for their charm, and she has very definite ideas about the source of those charms.

Iris March, the tired, gallant woman of Arlen's "The Green Hat," was one of her favorite characters and she played it on "the road" for David Belasco. Iris, she says, was the absolute opposite of Cleopatra and her charm was the charm of the sophisticated woman of the world.

Rose Trelawney in the delightful "Trelawney of the Wells" possessed the charm of genuine refinement which sprang, not from a background of culture, but from her own personal qualities. It was this, Mrs. Kushner believes, that caused both the romantic young actor, Tom Wrench, and the patrician, Arthur Gower, to fall in love with Rose.

Her two favorite Shakespearian roler are Viola in "Twelfth Noght," and, of course, Juliet. In Viola, she found loyalty, wistfulness and tenderness to charm Orsino from the Olivia he thought he loved.

Juliet's great charm for Romeo was twofold, according to Mrs. Kushner. First there was her innocence in such contrast to the coquetishness of Rosalind, whom Romeo at first adored, and then there was the barrier of family hatred between them which only urged on the romantic Romeo.

Voice Seductive.

In all of these lovely women, even in Iris Marsh, there was a strain of fragility, of dependence on the man, of helplessness that bred tenderness for them, Mrs. Kushner points out.

She believes that feminine charm consists to a great degree in letting the man do the leading, though the woman may do a bit of subtle direction as to the way in which she will be lead.

Much has been written and said of the beauty of Cleopatra's voice, Plutarch describing it as wonderfully seductive, melodious and persuasive.

As an actress, Mrs. Kushner is particularly aware of the volue of a lovely voice. She says, "a woman's voice is one of her most powerful weapons; both in her ability to use it, and not to use it at the proper time."

Beauty of face and figure are, of course, vastly important, she knows, but charm, which has so many definitions, may often overcome lack of beauty, she thinks. Caesar forgave Cleopatra her outbursts of temper, viciousness, jealousy, because of his own greatness and magnanimity, but also because of her unpremeditated charm and her obvious delight in being with him, Mrs. Kusnner believes, rather than because of her beauty—if she were beautiful. Historians differ on that point also.

Mrs. Kushner is finding more enjoyment in playing Cleopatra than in almost any role she ever has undertaken, she reports, because it is so difficult and challenging a part, because George Farrington is so excellent as Caesar, and Day Tuttle such a fine director. The play will be presented by the new Washington Civic Theater at Wardman Park Theater, tonight through to Saturday.

Feminine charm consists to a large degree in letting the man do the leading, believes Yvonne Kushner, who has depicted on the stage many famous sirens.

Six Rules Given To Train Child In Modern Way

Six rules for successful child training have been drawn up by Mrs. Clara Savage Littledale, editor of Parents' Magazine and widely known writer in the field of progressive education. They are:

Flavor each day with laughter and song.

"Parents should be reasonable," she warns. "If your child tears his clothes or covers himself with mud playing football the answer is not a whipping but an explanation. A loud commanding voice only creates rebellion, whereas a low tone will ease the whole family out of tense moments."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

THE TOAST of the Park avenue drawing rooms the last week or so has been young Randolph Churchill, son of the Winston, who can do practically anything better than anyone else in the British Empire.

ALICE HUGHES.

Young Randy, of course, came here in hot pursuit of his toe-dancing sister, Nancy, who seems bent on keeping up the Churchill family's worldwide reputation for unpredictability. Well, Nancy keeps dancing—she appeared in a modest variety act on Broadway, with pictures in all the papers—and she dances no better than hundreds of our own girls who "take" from Miss Paskins' Acadmey. But, of course, she's a Churchill, member of the great house of Marlborough, and as such rates and gets respectful attention.

As for the plump and affable Randolph, having failed to get his sister safely on the next boat for dear old Blighty, he has been doing the town royally. One of the things that interests our hostesses is that when the wine goes round young Churchill politely asks for tea with a spot of cream, please. It appears that if he stays strictly on the seat of the water cart until January 1, 1937, he will collect a hundred quid, which is still $500 of our money, from his honored pa. And a hundred quid, even to young Churchill, is important money this season. So while Nancy dances her pretty legs off, Gotham's party givers are enjoying the presence of a real live Churchill, and young, too!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The hardest things to be in the world's largest city is incognito. Hide where you will, the ferrets of the Fourth Estate will root you out in no time. For instance, I met the cute little Sylvia Sidney, of the movies, on Fifty-eighth street the other day. "Sh!" she shushed, "Not a soul is supposed to know I'm in town." Naturally, three newspaper gossipers announced her presence that same day—and I didn't tattle, either!

• • • •

Who pops into the news again but Novelist Ursula Parrott, that marvelous best-seller who was just Kitty Parrott from Boston when she and I shared a modest walk-up in the days before "Ex-Wife" made her rich and famous. Kitty, for whose masterpieces publishers now knock each other out, has just sold her Winsted, Conn., manse to a New York broker, and will town it for a while.

• • • •

Ever know that New York society scribblers have a trade name for any anonymous dowager to whom they wish to refer? She is always "Mrs. Vanderpool," for no especial reason except that it sounds very high-toned.

• • • •

And there's a great trend here toward "invisible windows." It began modestly enough with star sapphires and things at Avenue shops, but now, darn it, they have huge automobiles behind them—and try to grab one if you can! And the funny part of it is that one small finger-smudge inflicted by a curious bystander makes an invisible window just as visible as any!

• • • •

I am startled and delighted to learn that in the five boroughs of Greater New York reside, browse and give milk no less than 2,700 cows! This on the authority of Dr. Rice, our health commissioner. But if they're real New York cows, Doc, I'll bet my new toque they're not contented!

• • • •

I am bidden to see many things, but one of the most startling of recent weeks was a veritable gold mesh gown, as of handbags, and costing, according to the prayerful press agent, no less than $5,000. A pretty night club girl named Joyce Dushkin staggered briefly but effectively under its weight of 100 pounds.

• • • •

Litrachoor has its effect on fashion, too. I learn that there is a new "Scarlett Green"—just because that heroine of "Gone With the Wind" had green eyes and was partial to green raiment!

Parents Urged To Keep Child's Mind Occupied

Grown-ups Often Unaware How Time Drags While Youngsters Fret.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

TIME is very long to a little child. The adult who is always pressed for time, whose days fly by like moments and whose weeks are never long enough, often has no conception of the length even of minutes in a child's life. He fails to realize that a half hour of doing nothing is to a child what a week of empty days is to an adult.

One sees bored children everywhere. There is the child who is going on a train trip. The ride may be on!-- an hour long. Mother is tired and welcomes the chance to rest, or she has a book or a paper to read. The child is supposed just to sit with folded hands for an interminable period of time doing nothing which probably makes him irritable and nervous.

Or mother is going calling and takes Tommy with her. There are no toys in the house where they visit. Tommy must be a good boy and sit still. Would mother like to sit still and do nothing for a whole day? That is exactly what the half hour seems to Tommy.

When children are still babies in arms, the mother carries along food and changes of clothes for them wherever they go. It might be a good plan if, as the children grew older, she substituted a few toys for bottles and diapers. She could have a shopping bag always handy and stocked with a selection of toys.

She might vary these and add to them, keeping this particular set of toys for occasions when the child must be idle. Train trips and calls might then, in all probability, become treats instead of trials and the possibility of making the child nervous would be lessened.

Furthermore, such occasions would be far more enjoyable for mother, for instead of being annoyed by constant inquiries, "When are we going home?" "When will we be there?" she could rest or enjoy herself with a quiet mind.

Cut of Lamb Off Crown Choice Dish

Low Temperature Advised for Best Results; Meat Served in Platter.

FOR any dinner, when you want something especially nice choose a crown roast of lamb and prepare and serve it as shown in the accompanying illustration. It is easy to prepare a real treat for everyone.

The crown is made from the rib section of lamb, the same section as is used for rib chops, with the rib bones pointing upward and outward to form the crown. It has the same tender delicious meat that makes chops justly popular. The crown may be made into practically any size desired. A crown of 12 to 14 ribs is the most frequent size since this can be made from one lamb rack, and is large enough to serve six or seven persons, allowing the usual size serving, two chops per person.

Wrapped in Bacon.

The crown may be roasted either right side up, or upside down. If filled with a bread dressing before roasting, it will be necessary to place the crown right side up on a rack in the roasting pan, and in this case the rib ends should be protected from charring by wrapping them with salt pork or bacon.

If no dressing is used and the crown is filled with vegetables after being roasted, as was one in the picture shown above, the crown may be turned upside-down so that the fat as it melts runs down and keeps the unprotected rib bones moist.

Low Temperature Best.

As for any other roast, it is especially important that the lamb crown be roasted at a low temperature for the entire time. An oven temperature of 300 degrees Fahrenheit has been found to give excellent results, and at this temperature it requires 30 to 35 minutes per pound for roasting. The roast may be placed in an open roasting pan as directed, placed in a slow oven and forgotten until done. No water is added at any time during the roasting process, nor is the roast covered.

To serve, place the crown upright on a large platter, place paper frills over the rib ends, fill the center with a whole head of cauliflower and arrange pineapple slices decorated with red marashino cherries around the outside.

Claire Tilden Dress Pattern

"SHE'S ALREADY counting from one to five—the number of buttons on her frock!" boasts Mary Jane's mother who believes a coat-frock like Pattern 221 teaches self-reliance. Tearing about on her "scooter," skipping rope and sitting crosslegged on the floor proves she has ample room in those well-pressed skirt pleats. And won't those long sleeves (smaller sketch) feel mighty good when there's snow on the ground? Both frock and panties may be run up in little time. Wouldn't a novelty cotton tweed, bright washable challis or cotton broadcloth be nice for this? Detailed Sewing Guide accompanies this pattern.

Pattern 221 is cut in sizes 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10. Size 6 requires 2½ yards 36-inch fabric.

Spring Shoes Will Run Riot In Gay Colors

Regal Hues to Reflect the Spirit of Edward's Coronation.

As in clothes, color will play an important role in the spring shoe pageant. Echoing the present trend in the wardrobe, the tones are deep, rich and restrained. But be prepared to walk in color, for feet to be smart next spring can not be dark and drab. According to predictions, shoes will set the tempo for frocks and suits, and will be the inspiration for costume color themes.

Regal Colors Featured.

Regal colors have marked fashion distinction because they reflect the influence of the coming coronation of King Edward of England. Crown gold, regal blue, royal red and king purple are the accepted tones. For sports shoes, they are used alone or in combination with each other, or white. The brilliant blue, purple and red of this distinguished "royal" group are also smart in sandals that harmonize with prints or contrast with monotone costumes. Discreet touches of these three tones provide a bright accent to shoes in neutral colors, as navy, black or gray. Crown gold can be classified as a new deeper and richer version of the popular chamois type. Glove manufacturers are working with the shoe people and have chosen these four royal hues for gloves, to provide a harmonizing ensemble merger.

High fashion tones for smart town wear, adapted to tailored or more formal shoes for spring, 1937, will be worn in Ardoise blue, French moss, Longchamps beige and the coronation colors. Besides these new tones, the popular Aubergine, chaudron, Spanish tan, cinnamon brown, marrona, Oriental oxblood, Araby green, Paris gray and marine blue will again grace the feet of fastidious women. There will be a decided trend next spring for shoes in dramatic contrast with the costume.

Named for Flowers.

In the pastel family, bouquet colors (named for flowers) will be an important note in summer and late spring shoes. The all-white shoe continues in importance and strong fashion emphasis still centers on white with brown, oxblood and marine blue; white allied with the new royal colors is a new style note in sports shoes. All-black shoes will again be part of the spring fashion scene; black with royal tones, russet shades, Longchamps beige and Oriental oxblood is a significant new style trend.

Men will be going in for colored shoes, too, next spring. Saddle tan, racer brown, bridle tan, bourbon, colt brown, horseshoe gray, country tan, spur gray and harness brown will be worn alone and as trimming on white shoes. Midnight blue shoes and the same color combined with white, will be chosen by smart young men about town for business as well as resort and sports wear.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

Protect Against Eclampsia.

Every prospective mother should go through pregnancy with comparative ease, and there will be but few cases, if proper hygiene is observed, that will not fall within this category. The bringing of a new life into the world is a normal process of nature, and science has thrown about it so many safeguards that disaster is inexcusable. Nevertheless, the expectant mother must profit by information that is readily available, so that unforeseen complications will not enter the picture. Forewarned is forearmed.

Diet is important, and should include two pints of milk a day, a teaspoonful of cod liver oil, butter, fruit and green vegetables. Additional food, of course, will be required, but those listed are essential. The mother needs calcium not only for her own body, but to supply the bony skeleton of the growing infant, and sometimes this mineral will have to be added in some such simple form as calcium gluconate. In order to avoid acidosis the use of starchy materials during the last few weeks may be increased.

Two Types of Poisoning.

Prospective parents should be familiar with the symptoms of eclampsia—the poisoning of pregnancy—which include swelling of the ankles, an appearance of duskiness in the skin, a rise in the blood pressure, albumin in the urine, dull headaches, nausea and pain in the stomach area. These signs may not appear exactly in this order, but should any one arise a visit to the physician is called for instantly. We must regard all abnormal symptoms prior to delivery as possessing cyclonic power for evil.

Upon the mother's kidneys an additional strain is placed and diseased organs occasionally break down. The woman may have been perfectly well until within two or three months before delivery is expected. Suddenly swelling of the ankles comes in with a slight amount of albumin in the urine. With active and immediate treatment these symptoms can be controlled. Only in rare cases will the patient enter a deep toxic state.

There is a difference, however, between the poisoning that is apparently associated with the kidneys and that which pertains to the liver. In the kidney type the patient is bloated and swollen, appears pale and anemic, complains of disturbed vision and the blood pressure is raised. In that originating in the liver the swelling is not so great and there is less albumin in the urine, but distress in the region of the stomach is quite marked. The blood pressure may be much higher than in the kidney form.

There seems to be some relation between vitamin deficiency and the complications of pregnancy, and it has been pointed out repeatedly that in any large number of cases in which eclampsia occurs the patients will show, as a rule, a poor state of nutrition, suggesting some deficiency disease. Thus we can account for the anemias and the neuritis (painful nerves) which develop now and then.

How may one go through pregnancy safely? First, by frequent examinations by a competent physician, and, second, by a prompt attack upon the first indication of the slightest difficulty. This means that the patient should be in bed so that metabolism may be held at a low level. The diet must be controlled carefully and some drug therapy may be needed. Only in rare instances will it be necessary to interrupt pregnancy in order to save the mother.

We must recall in this connection that if symptoms persist and do not yield at once to treatment, liver or kidney damage—or both—my be so severe as to jeopardize the health of the mother in later life. We must remember also that the rapid elimination of toxins is demanded in order to save the heart and the brain. An excess amount of carbohydrates will be needed to replace the glycogen (starch) lost from the liver. Fortunately physicians have at hand a store of emergency remedies, such as intravenous magnesium sulphate and glucose, that can be used with safety.

Strict adherance to the instructions of your physician as to diet, rest, exercise, sleep, etc., means safety for both mother and child.

Recipes Suggested For Sunday Supper

SUNDAY night suppers, in the modern mode, may be anything you wish to make them, as elaborate or as simple as your conscience dictates. There are no set rules, nor is there any limit to the variety of food combinations which you may choose, so long as the meal is hearty enough to satisfy the appetite.

Sweetbreads in Cream.

2 pairs sweetbreads
¼ cup blanched, shaved almonds
½ cup smallest button mushrooms
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
Salt and pepper
Paprika
Patty shells

Prepare sweetbreads by parboiling them for 20 minutes in water to which one teaspoon vinegar has been added for each quart. Remove membrane and cut into pieces. Make a cream sauce by combining flour with butter, gradually adding the milk, and allowing to cook until thickened. Add the pieces of sweetbreads, shaved almonds and button mushrooms. Serve in small patty shells and sprinkle with paprika.

In cutting angelfood cake use a silk thread instead of a knife to prevent settling and crushing.

Butter and sugar can be creamed easily, when butter is hard, by warming the sugar slightly.

Grape Pie Recipe Is Something New

There are many varieties of grapes now on the market that the homemaker may use in her kitchen, and there are many uses for these grapes. It is no longer necessary for her to use this fruit in only jelly or grape juice. She may find one of the new grape recipes interesting.

Have you ever tried grape pie? This recipe is good with bran pastry.

Grape Pie.

4 cups Concord grapes
3 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon cornstarch
⅛ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon grated lemon rind
1 recipe bran pastry

Wash and stem grapes; cut in half; remove seeds. Mix sugar, flour, cornstarch, salt and grated lemon rind together thoroughly; combine with grapes. Cook slowly until thick and clear. Stir occasionally, being careful not to crush grapes. Cool. Line a pie pan with pastry. Fill pastry with cooled filling. Cut a few gashes in center of top crust. Moisten edges of undercrust with water; place top crust on lightly. Press edges of top and bottom crusts together and trim one-half inch beyond pan, using scissors. Flute by placing forefinger and thumb of left hand against outside edge and pressing pastry against forefinger of right hand. Bake in hot oven (450 Fahrenheit) about 30 minutes. Yield, one 8-inch pie.

Cream which is hard to whip will whip quickly by adding a few drops of lemon juice.

Value of Prunes In Diet Stressed

Food budgets planned before the arrival of the drought suggested spending 25 cents out of every food dollar for fruits and vegetables. Now that the drought, heat, and grasshoppers have taken their toll in gardens, fresh green things have skyrocketed in price, leaving the budgets rather warped looking.

This is a time when it pays to know the nutritional values of various foods, as such knowledge helps us select substitutes for the garden vegetables which have soared out of our budget field. One food which has shown no appreciable advance in price is the prune and it offers many of the health values found in vegetables, as vitamins and minerals.

In vitamin A content prunes are superior to tomatoes, lettuce, fresh peas, string beans and sweet potatoes. Food authorities call prunes an excellent source of the vitamins A and G and a good source of vitamin B.

Distinctive Food in Old New Orleans Has Inspired Poets.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

Nowhere in the United States, not even in New York City, are the food habits more cosmopolitan than in New Orleans and Louisiana, where the influence of French, Spanish and English racial strains may be traced in the menus.

Another element which makes Louisiana cookery different is its nearness to Mexico and other tropical countries.

Thackeray, when he visited America, found in New Orleans the most distinctive foods of any with which he had been served during his stay. He grew eloquent over New Orleans bouillabaisse and declared that it surpassed in flavor that of Marseilles, the native habitat of the dish.

Thackeray went even further. He put his thoughts on the subject into the form of a poem, part of which read as follows:

The Ballad of Bouillabaisse.

This Bouillabaisse a noble dish is—
A sort of soup, or broth, or stew,
Or hotchpitch of all sort of fishes,
That Greenwich never could outdo;
Green herbs, red peppers, mussels, saffron,
Soles, onions, garlic, roach and dace.
All these you eat at Terre's Tavern
In that one dish of Bouillabaisse.

There is no use trying to make "Bouillabaisse" for two persons only. The recipe says out boldly "for 10." Of course, there are imitations of it, but the real article is made as follows:

Bouillabaisse.

1½ quarts water, 1 pound fresh shrimps, 1 pound scallops, 2 pounds fillets of fish (haddock, or any boned fish), 1 pound lobster meat, 2 dozen oysters, 2 large onions, diced, 2 divisions of garlic, very finely chopped, 1½ teaspoons curry powder, 1 can tomato soup, 1 cup grated American cheese, ½ cup sherry wine, 3 bay leaves, ½ pound fresh mushrooms, 12 cloves, 2 tablespoons butter and salt and pepper to taste.

Boil 1 pound of shrimp and 4 cloves in 1½ quarts of water and 1 level tablespoon of salt for ten minutes; then remove the shrimps with a straining spoon, leaving the water standing in the pot as this is to be used later.

Remove the shells from the shrimps and slit them in halves, lengthwise. The mushrooms should be cut in slices, ¼ inch thick.

Cut up the onions and garlic. Then put them in a large frying pan, with 2 tablespoons butter or olive oil; when melted fry the onions and garlic to a golden brown, then add tomatoes, 4 cloves, 3 bay leaves, 1½ teaspoons curry powder, 1 cup grated cheese, ¼ cup sherry wine and allow the whole mixture to simmer for one - half hour. Season with salt to taste.

When simmering take the water in which the shrimps were boiled, bring it to the boiling point, then turn the flame low and add the fillets of fish, the scallops, 4 cloves, ¼ cup sherry wine and allow to simmer until the fish is cooked; the water must not boil or the fish will break into small pieces. After the fish has simmered 15 minutes, turn out the fire.

Cook for ½ hour and then add shrimps and mushrooms. Cook for another five minutes. Thicken with a little flour and cook for five minutes more.

Strain the water from the fish into another pot. Put it aside for soup stock. Place the fish on a big serving platter, remove the bay leaves from the mixture in the pan and pour it over the fish and serve.

A Washington woman who knows her Louisiana and New Orleans has written as follows of the Old French Market in New Orleans, which is the inspiration for much Creole cooking.

"The French market presented a colorful pageant. The gray old buildings with their masonry pillars overhung with the slate roofs with huge flagstones of the pavements or banquettes were always scoured. Picturesqueness was added by the garb of the Indian basket weavers, squatted on their blankets selling powdered sassafras for the gumbo file, a favorite dish of the Creoles; hand-polished rice, medicinal and edible herbs beautiful basketry or other Indian specialties."

New Orleans Pralines.

2 cups pecan meats, 1½ cups sugar, ½ cup sweet cream, 1 cup maple syrup.

Boil the sugar, cream and syrup until it forms a soft ball in water when tried. Remove from the fire and beat until creamy. Add the broken nut meats. Drop a tablespoonful on buttered paper and allow it to become firm and crisp.

Here is another famous Louisiana dish.

Crepes Suzette New Orleans.

1 egg, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 cup milk, 1 orange, 1 teaspoon melted butter ½ teaspoon salt 2 teaspoons baking powder and 1 wine glass champagne, white wine or brandy.

Beat the eggs and the sugar, stir in the milk, butter, salt and baking powder. Pour in a thin layer of the batter and tip your pan quickly so as to produce thinnest pancake possible. When brown butter on both sides. Pour a wine glass of champagne or brandy or white wine into a chafing dish. Rub 12 lumps of sugar vigorously over an orange and place the sugar in the champagne which is cooking in the chafing dish. Add a little grated orange peel and a half cup of melted sweet butter. Cover the chafing dish and cook until a smoth thick sauce results. Dip each pancake into the sauce, lift it out, roll it up and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve immediately.

No discussion of Louisiana cookery would be complete without mention of "jambalaya," the most popular of State dishes. The late Senator Huey P. Long advertised far and wide "pot likker" as a rare State viand. But jambalaya is the real Louisiana dish, beloved of all, high and low, rich and poor.

In this manner it is prepared by the Creole cooks:

Jambalaya.

1½ cups cold chicken, veal or mutton; 1 cup boiled rice, 2 large stalks of celery, ½ green pepper, 1 large onion, 1½ cups stewed tomatoes, salt and pepper, buttered crumbs.

Mix together the chicken, rice and tomatoes, and allow them to cook for 10 minutes. Then chop and add the onion, green pepper and celery. Turn the mixture into a baking dish and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake for one hour in a moderate oven. Serve very hot. This is an excellent way of utilizing left-over meat or chicken.

Suzettes, a famous Louisiana luncheon or supper dish.

Wine Poached Oyster Recipe Wins First in Prize Contest

Dishes Submitted for All Courses, From Appetizers to Desserts, Including Puddings, Soups and Deviled Oysters.

Our oyster recipe contest this week proved a popular one, bringing forth recipes for dishes for all courses of a meal, from appetizers to desserts. Included in these were ways of making oyster puddings, oyster salads, oyster soups and deviled oysters.

Prize No. 2 of $2 was won by Mrs. James Strayer, Bradley boulevard, Bethesda, Md., for oyster rarebit. The third prize of $1 goes to Annie Padgett and Kate McCowan, 6412 Connecticut avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., for delicious savory oysters on the half shell. The fourth prize was won by Miss Gertrude Drake, apartment 511, 705 Eighteenth street northwest, for her recipe for baked oysters. The recipe for an oyster supper dish, submitted by Mrs. George Canalle, New Market, Va., won the fifth prize of $1.

Oysters Poached in Wine.

1 gill white wine
½ cup mushrooms, chopped fine
½ cup chicken or veal, chopped fine.
2 tablespoons melted butter
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
8 drops tabasco sauce
1 teaspoon salt. Pepper
8 individual cases, paper, metal or china. If paper, oil well on the outside

Poach the oysters in their liquor and wine 3 minutes or till they begin to curl. Do not boil. Drain, cut oysters in half each, removing hard part. Saute mushrooms in butter 3 minutes. Line cases with chicken. Place oysters in them and sprinkle with sauces then mushrooms. Add the remaining seasoned chicken, brush with butter and bake on tin sheet in moderate oven 15 minutes. Serve on small, hot plate garnished with fried parsley.

Oyster Rarebit.

Put 1 tablespoon butter and ½ pound cheese broken in small bits, 1 teaspoon each of salt and mustard and a little cayenne into chaffing dish or double boiler. While butter is melting beat 2 eggs, slightly, and add to them the oyster liquor. Mix this gradually with the melted cheese. Add oysters and turn at once over hot toast.

The recipe of Miss Padgett and Miss McCowan:

Delicious Savory Oysters.
(On Half Shell.)

18 shells
36 select oysters (large)
1 green pepper (small)
1 medium-sized onion
2 slices bacon
Pepper and salt to taste
3 slices Smithfield ham
Butter

Wash shells. Wash oysters and drain. Place two oysters in each shell. Cover with teaspoon of onion and green pepper and bacon chopped together, sprinkle with pepper and salt to taste and add small piece of butter. Place piece of Smithfield ham on each shell. Bake in hot oven 10 or 12 minutes. Serve three on a plate with slice of lemon and parsley. This recipe serves six.

Miss Drake's recipe:

Baker Oysters.

1 teaspoon horseradish to each oyster
½ teaspoon lemon juice to each oyster
1-3 strip of bacon to each.

Place the oyster in a single layer on a baking sheet. Cover with the horseradish, then sprinkle lemon juice over the horseradish. Place the strip of bacon over the top and bake in a hot oven until the bacon is fairly crisp. This recipe serves six. This dish is an especially good appetizer.

Mrs. Canalle's recipe follows:

Oyster Supper Dish.

2 dozen medium-sized oysters
1 package small pork sausages
1 teaspoon salt
1 egg slightly beaten
2 tablespoons flour or less
½ cup cracker crumbs
2 tablespoons butter
4 eggs beaten slightly
½ teaspoon salt
1-16 teaspoon pepper
3 tablespoons cream or evaporated milk

Place sausages in a heavy fying pan and fry slowly ten minutes. Wipe the drained oysters with a towel; season with salt, roll in flour, dip into beaten eggs and then into cracker crumbs. Mix beaten eggs in a bowl with salt, pepper and cream or evaporated milk.

Heat the butter in a second skillet; fry three or four minutes. Lay the prepared oysters in the hot butter and fry until brown on the under side. Pour the egg mixture over the oysters and let cook one minute; turn out the heat. The hot pan and oysters will aid in cooking the omelet.

Fold the omelet and slip into a heated serving platter; surrounded with the brown sausages which have been well drained. Garnish the platter with a bit of parsley or cress. Serve at once with hot rolls and a green salad.

Rev. Mr. Tracy, Sign Language Preacher, Dies

Funeral for Missionary to Deaf Will Be Tomorrow in St. Mark's Church.

The Rev. Hobart Lorraine Tracy, 69, Episcopalian missionary to the deaf in Washington, Virginia and West Virginia for the last decade, died yesterday at his home, 3821 South Dakota avenue northeast. He had been ill for two weeks.

Mr. Tracy, himself deaf, was one of eleven Episcopal ministers in the United States to deliver sermons in sign language. He preached here at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Third and A streets southeast.

Born in Richland, Iowa, Mr. Tracy lost his hearing at the age of 13 as the result of an illness. He attended the Iowa State School for the Deaf and then came to Washington to attend Gallaudet College, from which he was graduated in 1890.

Ordained in 1912.

From 1890 until 1921 Mr. Tracy taught at the Louisiana State School for the Deaf at Baton Rouge. At the same time he studied for the Episcopalian ministry and was ordained in 1912.

In 1921 he became a faculty member at the Mississippi School for the Deaf at Jackson. He carried on his Episcopalian missionary work there as he had also done in Louisiana.

Mr. Tracy came to Washington in 1926. Most of his time was spent in itinerant preaching through the dioceses of West Virginia, Virginia, southwestern Virginia and southern Virginia. He conducted services every other week at St. Mark's Church.

Canon Raymond L. Wolven, chaplain to Bishop James E. Freeman, who is out of the city, said last night that he knew the bishop would be deeply shocked to learn of Mr. Tracy's death. Bishop Freeman, he said, has always held Mr. Tracy's work to be of great importance to the church.

Surviving Mr. Tracy are his wife, Mrs. Lizzie Lee Woods Tracy; two sons, E. L. Tracy, of Baton Rouge, La., and W. L. Tracy, of Washington, and two sisters, Mrs. Kate Andersen, of Grand Island, Nebr., and Mrs. Sallie Chacey, of Richland, Iowa. He also leaves one granddaughter.

Funeral services will be held at St. Mark's at 3 p. m. tomorrow with two clergymen officiating. The Rev. William R. Moody, pastor of St. Mark's, will conduct the regular service. The Rev. Henry J. Pulver, of Philadelphia, will lead a special service for the benefit of deaf persons in the congregation. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mrs. Slade to Preside At Lindemann Lecture

Mrs. William A. Slade, prominent in educational and social welfare work, will preside at the second of the series of four lectures for volunteers in social work at which Dr. Edouard C. Lindemann, nationally known lecturer, will speak. This meeting at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building, will be held at 11 o'clock Friday morning, instead of Thursday as originally contemplated.

The series, according to officials of the Council of Social Agencies, promises to be the most outstanding of any series yet offered under the sponsorship of the council. Arranged by the council committee on volunteers, of which Mrs. John Jay O'Connor is chairman, the first lecture by Dr. Lindemann last week attracted a capacity crowd, including wives of Cabinet officers and other socially prominent women. The general theme of the course is "Building a Better Civilization."

In February, 1930, he was appointed senior scientist for special investigations on sedimentation and river hydraulics under the Mississippi River Commission. He remained in this work until July, 1934, when he was named to the Soil Conservation Service to organize a program of reservoir silting surveys.

When the service was transferred to the Department of Agriculture and established as a permanent bureau, Mr. Eakin was made head of the research sub-division of Sedimentation and Hydraulic Studies.

Landon Sought Loan in Secret, Ickes Discloses

Asked Money to Finance Kansas Gas Pipe Line, Secretary Says.

The Interior Secretary said evidence of the scheme was in the files of the Public Works Administration. He said this proof included the proposed charter and by-laws of the corporation. He said it was suggested to Landon that he obtain legislative authorization for his plan.

"This idea," he continued, "was always met with the plea that Gov. Landon did not want the people of Kansas to know what he was up to until it was too late to block his plan.

"The theory of the gentleman from Kansas was that 50 per cent of the available gas market in that State could be captured by the proposed State-owned system. Their view also was that even as to the 50 per cent of the gas market remaining to the private utility interests, rates would have to be drastically cut as the result of State competition."

Gov. Landon Replies.

Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 20 (AP).—Alf M. Landon tonight characterized Secretary Ickes' description of him as a "State Socialist" as "typical of the confusion" in the New Deal and asserted "this attack is like the losing team throwing the ball around wildly attempting to score."

Ickes, in a Nation-wide broadcast from Washington, had stated Landon last year was a "State Socialist," advocating State-owned telephone and natural gas distribution systems.

In a formal "reply to Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior," issued little more than an hour before his scheduled speech in the Coliseum here, Landon said:

"Up to date the Administration's spokesmen have been attacking me on the ground I was a puppet of big business. Now they attack me on the ground that I am a Socialist and the enemy of big business.

Typical of Policies.

"This is typical of the confusion and contradictory policies that have characterized this Administration from its beginning. This attack is like the losing team throwing the ball around wildly attempting to score."

Referring to Ickes' assertion that Landon had suggested a plan for State ownership of gas and telephone utilities, the Governor replied:

"Yes, I communicated with President Roosevelt's Secretary of the Interior. I was engaged in a fight for lower gas rates in Kansas. I was determined to obtain fair rates. And I did. I am glad the Administration has seen fit to make these negotiations public. They show I was determined to bring lower gas rates to Kansas, even to the extent of resorting to public ownership on a State basis.

"I have always been in favor of public ownership as a gun behind the door in the adjustment of proper and fair utility rates. I have always felt that States that have good municipal ownership laws, and consequently good municipal plants, were in the best position to negotiate for lower rates."

"The difference between my plan and the haphazard system of the present national Administration," Landon continued, "is that this Administration believes in getting into business and apologizing later.

"I believe in getting private interests to recognize their obligations to the public and letting private business alone. That is just what I did in Kansas. I got lower rates for the people of Kansas on gas and other utilities, and private business continues to operate.

"I might add that whatever I do in the matter of utility and power projects, when elected President I will not use the money of the people to attempt to harness the tides!"

Denies Formal Plea.

Landon said he "never made any formal application to Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of the Interior for any funds for use in our public service project.

"In the long-drawn fight we were in at that time for fair gas rates, the Henry L. Doherty outfit was resorting to every technicality to prevent an adjustment by the duly constituted State authorities. • • • Naturally, I asked Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of the Interior to keep our discussion secret. If it had been given publicity, the private gas interests would have preempted all the available gas reserves, and we would have been out of luck.

"But we were finally able to obtain the lower rates," Landon said, without resorting to the proposed gas project.

Suspect in Soviet Plot Back in Editor's Chair

Moscow, Oct. 20 (AP).—Nicolai Bucharin, editor of the government organ Izvestia, tonight was again in full charge of the newspaper's editorial policies after two months of inactivity following his implication in a conspiracy to overthrow the government.

He was implicated in a counter-revolutionary plot in a trial in August by one of the defendants, T. Reingold, who with 15 other defendants, was later executed. During the succeeding two months, Bucharin for a period was under investigation for complicity in the plot, but he never was removed publicly from his job on Izvestia.

Friendly Suit Filed In D. C. Tax Snarl

A friendly suit designed to straighten out a snarl in the accounting system of the District government was instituted in District Court yesterday when the District Commissioners brought suit against Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, to collect $3,229.90 on his bond.

The suit, it was explained, was caused when one of Donovan's employes was caught after having fraudulently issued tax refunds totaling the amount of the suit. The employe, Joseph W. Frenzel, was convicted and sent to prison.

Meantime, because of the technicalities of their bonds, Maj. J. L. Lusby, disbursing officer of the District, and Maj. Donovan have been unable to clear their books. Maj. Lusby's bond is payable to the United States, while that of Maj. Donovan is payable to the District. Suit has already been filed against Maj. Lusby to collect on his bond.

A bill was introduced in Congress to remedy the situation, but was never reported from committee. Thus, in order to keep the District from carrying as a perpetual feature of its accounting the Frenzel shortage, the suits were necessary. The Corporation Counsel's office filed the suit, which was directed against the National Serety Co.

Security Tax Set-up

Roughly, this is to be the set-up at the Bureau of Internal Revenue for the collection of taxes under the social security act:

There are to be two divisions here in Washington, one operating under the income tax section to handle the employers' returns, and the second, under the miscellaneous tax unit, to take care of old-age-tax payments.

Plans for the establishment of the old-age-tax division, which probably will be headed by Newton Montgomery, have not as yet been approved by Secretary Morgenthau. This section of the security act goes into effect January 1, and it is estimated about 2,000,000 persons will be filing monthly tax returns.

The employers' section is headed by A. B. Niess. The forms on which employers are to make their returns are on their way out to the regional collector offices now. Returns do not have to be made until January 31, which should bring them into Washington during February and March, when the peak of the work will be done.

Niess plans to do his recruiting gradually, taking a few clerks on now and increasing the number as the February-March period approaches. How many persons will be taken on is still uncertain, estimates of the number of returns to be received varying from 800,000 to 1,200,000. Many clerks will be transferred from other Internal Revenue divisions. All newcomers will be drawn from civil service rolls. This also will hold true for the old-age-tax division.

The two Washington social security divisions will handle all the accounting work. Actual collection of taxes and checking on delinquency will be done by the 64 collector offices scattered throughout the country.

A special social security division to handle both phases of the act is to be set up in each collector's office. A division chief and clerical and traveling force large enough to handle the work of the particular region will be appointed at each office. Appointments are to be made by the collectors in charge—which should mean several hundred fairly good political jobs.

In most cases skeleton field organizations have already been set up, but quite a number of appointments are being held up until after election. Civil service classification rules will govern the salaries to be paid, division chiefs getting between $2,300 and $3,500 to start.

The employes emergency rest room in Agriculture's South Building is to be enlarged and made more comfortable.

Machine vs. Toil

Soil Conservation Service workers are constantly criticizing this machine age of ours and praising the rustic virtues of Mother Nature. But every once in a while, we suspect, these nature-lovers grow fickle and succumb to the glittering, and no doubt harmful, allures of our machine civilization.

As an example of a changed soil conservation service worker, there is Orin S. Welch, one of the regional photographers, who has just developed a device for taking pictures from above the ground without climbing trees. Welch uses a ladder mounted on a light truck and uses his camera in fireman style. The ladder makes photographing a good deal easier and safer and no doubt Welch thinks he has improved on nature.

A. F. G. E. Reaffiliation

Move number one in what may prove to be the opening of negotiations with national A. F. G. E. headquarters for the reaffiliation of the five expelled "New Deal" lodges was taken yesterday by the Securities and Exchange Commission Union.

In a letter to President Stengle, Milton V. Freeman, the lodge president, asked for "full and complete details of the charges against this lodge" and a statement "of your attitude and of that of the executive council on the question of reaffiliation of Lodge No. 245."

Freeman wrote in response to a letter from the national secretary, Mrs. Bernice B. Heffner, formally notifying the lodge of the revocation of its temporary certificate but failing to give any reason for the convention action.

"The charges as reported by the press, are to the best of our knowledge, completely unfounded, and we find it difficult to believe that a convention could have taken action based on such grounds," reads Freeman's letter. "We are sure that if we are given an opportunity to explain how baseless these charges are, you will see your way clear to expeditious reaffiliation of Lodge 245 as a fully chartered lodge.

"In all fairness we should be presented with a full and complete statement of the charges against us so we may prepare our defense against these charges. Therefore by direction of the lodge, I hereby make formal request that you furnish this lodge with a copy of the transcript of the meeting of the convention and of the report of the executive council presented to the convention by Cecil E. Custer, insofar as they relate to the cancellation of the temporary certificate of affiliation of Lodge 245."

The "one red mouse" defense of the Social Security Board Union has been mailed out to all A. F. G. E. lodges in the country.

Eugene O'Neill's "Beyond the Horizon" will be presented by the Resettlement Drama Group, November 6, at the Agriculture Auditorium. Included in the cast are Fay Armstrong, Elizabeth Rogers, Martha Rice, Darwin Swanson, Foster Nixon, Edward Dougherty, W. M. Russell, Oscar Kaemon and Edgar Gaardsmore's 5-year-old son, Robin. Alexander Knowlton is doing the directing and Olaf Nordmark is in charge of the sets.

Assisting Marguerite M. Krenek, of Resettlement, whose appointment as editor of the Young Democrat was announced here last week, are Daniel Webster Delano, jr., a fourth cousin of the President, and an employe of the Library of Congress; Paul M. Millians, of the Maritime Commission, and Lee H. Shuger, of the General Accounting Office.

Ballou to Lay Kemp Ruling Before Board

'Impossible Situation' Is Created by Decision, Superintendent Says.

Facing what Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, calls an "impossible situation," the Board of Education will give its first collective attention this afternoon to Justice Jennings Bailey's ruling that nonresident pupils must be admitted to local public schools.

Consideration of the problem is prompted by Justice Bailey's decision of Monday in the case of Lois Kemp, 11-year-old daughter of a PWA official. The public schools must admit Lois, who lives in Clarendon, Va., to Gordon Junior High School, as her father requested in a writ of mandamus filed in District Court, Justice Bailey ruled.

Dr. Ballou declined to comment on the board's probable course of action, but said he expects to lay "the facts of the case" before the school trustees. When informed earlier of Justice Bailey's ruling, the superintendent remarked that he had been compelled to "meet an impossible situation."

In his presentation of "the facts" he probably will submit to the board a statement of the crowded condition of the schools this year, and point out the problem which the board must solve if the District Court of Appeals formally upholds Justice Bailey's decision.

Have Exercised Discretion.

Up to the present time the superintendent and the Board of Education have exercised discretionary power in admitting nonresident pupils, whose parents are employed in the District of Columbia, to schools here. They have acted on the opinion of the late Corporation Counsel William W. Bride, that a law stating such pupils "shall be admitted and taught free of charge in the schools of the District" is "permissive," not "mandatory."

Justice Bailey declared the law is "mandatory." He has granted the District, through Vernon E. West, assistant corporation counsel, five days in which to amend its answer to Kemp's petition for a writ of mandamus. This will delay formal court action in issuing the writ until after this week.

In the meantime the principal hope of school officials is that the delay will give them time to prepare for an enrollment increase that might reach more than 2,000 boys and girls.

93,781 Now Enrolled.

Figures in the office of the school statistician show that there are now 93,781 boys and girls in school, and that the enrollment peak has not yet been reached. Each year attendance continues to mount until November 1.

If nonresident pupils are admitted it will mean, school officials predict, a complete rearrangement of school boundary lines around Gordon, Alice Deal, Paul and Taft Junior Highs. These schools, located nearest Chevy Chase, Takoma Park and Hyattsville, would get the heaviest part of the new enrollment.

While the nonresident public problem is expected to hold the center of attention at this afternoon's meeting, it was not mentioned on Dr. Ballou's docket of business sent to board members.

He listed the announcement of Principal Allan Davis' retirement. Davis, who has been principal of Roosevelt High School for several years, reaches the 70-year retirement age November 14.

His retirement creates a vacancy which may be filled by board action today. Miss Mae Bradshaw, assistant principal there, has been supported for the position.

Fire Alarm Box On Avenue Marked By Orange Light

If you want to report a fire in the vicinity of Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, look for a box with a glass bulb that looks like an orange balloon over it.

Motorists have complained, he said, that the conventional red light above fire alarm boxes confuses them as they often mistake it for a stop light.

Memorial Bridge Shut 9 Hours As Crew Rushes Work on Gears

After being closed to traffic for nine hours, longest period of inactivity since it was completed in 1932, Arlington Memorial Bridge was thrown open at 6:05 p. m. yesterday with a new gear and crankshaft for its two 6,000-ton draw spans.

Thousands of motorists, ordered to detour by park policemen stationed at either end of the $15,000,000 bridge, grumbled and fretted as a half dozen workmen toiled from 9:15 a. m. until after dark to install the mechanism.

The replacement was made necessary by the extreme cold weather of last February, when the locks were thrown out of commission by ice. Some of the affected parts were repaired but the 1,000-pound crankshaft and an 8-inch gear were too badly damaged to be kept in service.

The installation job was started immediately after the morning rush hour. Edwin C. Atkinson, bridge overseer, hoped the new parts would be fitted and the barricades removed in time for the 4:30 exodus, but the evening traffic was practically spent when the span was reopened.

In spite of the extra burden placed on Highway and Key bridges, police reported no jams greater than usually occur when Government workers by the thousands return to their homes at the close of the day.

While the installation was under way, the east span was raised about five feet above the level of its twin, which was not disturbed.

His Life Began in Police Court

Gypsy Becomes Mother in Cell Waiting Trial in Holdup Case

Mrs. Delphia Marks Gives Birth to 8-Pound Boy Before Medical Aid Arrives; Both Doing Well; Was Held With Sister in Attack Charge.

While awaiting trial, Mrs. Delphia Marks, 27-year-old gypsy, gave birth to an 8-pound boy in a Police Court cell block yesterday before medical aid could reach her.

The woman and four other members of her clan were arrested by Eighth Precinct police Friday in connection with an attempted robbery that afternoon in the 3200 block Wisconsin avenue northwest.

Delphia and her sister, Mary, 26, were charged with the holdup attempt. The others, Bostonia Mundra, 25, Sylvia Kalltina, 25, and John Marks, 27, were released yesterday when the District Attorney's office refused to issue papers against them.

The two women are accused of having tried to rob William L. Curry, of 3701 Massachusetts avenue northwest. He said he fought them off and they failed to get his wallet, containing a large sum of money.

Yesterday morning the two women were taken from the Woman's Bureau and placed in the Police Court cell until their case could be called. Delphia became ill and before a physician could arrive from Casualty Hospital her baby was born.

The mother and child were taken to Gallinger Hospital.

"Mother and baby are doing well," nurses said.

Roger Baldwin Warns Nation Against Fascism

Roger Baldwin executive secretary of the American Civil Liberties Union, last night warned that the only way for this country to resist the advances of fascism was for labor, professional and middle-class groups to organize—to effect, in a measure, a popular front concerned with the perpetuation of our democratic form of government.

Baldwin was speaking at a dinner of the Washington branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, held at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

"The fundamental question before us today," he declared, "is whether democracy can become aggressive enuogh to protect its institutions from a Fascist attack."

The development of the Committee for Industrial Organization was hailed by Baldwin as the most significant labor event since the World War. It may, he predicted, form the basis for a popular front.

Certain forms of fascism, the speaker said, are with us now. He termed use of troops to break strikes and private violence of the Ku Klux Klan type as typically Fascist.

Gardner Jackson, chairman of the National Committee on Rural Social Planning, reviewed the history of the Government employe organization, commenting particularly on the John Donovan and Robert Durand cases.

Jackson said that most important case was yet to come up—that of the ten Department of Justice employes recently dismissed. He said he believed that enough evidence would be found in the trial of the case to force J. Edgar Hoover to resign. The Federal Bureau of Investigation arm of the Government was made to order for fascist elements, he declared.

John Finerty, counsel for Tom Mooney and at present attorney for Robert Durand, ousted Federal Power Commisison employe, spoke briefly at the meeting.

Pacelli to Arrive In Capital Tonight

Cardinal Pacelli, tall, bespectacled secretary of state for the Vatican, is scheduled to arrive at Union Station at 7:30 o'clock tonight. He will go directly to the Apostolic Delegation House, 1811 Biltmore street northwest, where he will have dinner and spend the night.

His program tomorrow begins at 10 a. m., with a visit to Catholic University. He will address a gathering of faculty members, students and distinguished clergy, headed by Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore.

Thereafter, he will visit the Library of Congress, the headquarters of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the National Press Club, where he will be guest of honor at luncheon. A trip to Mount Vernon will follow.

At 5:10 p. m., Cardinal Pacelli will visit historic Georgetown University, where the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., the president, will confer upon him the honorary degree of doctor of canon and civil law. Georgetown has conferred that degree on only one other individual, the late Marshal Foch, of France, generalissimo of the Allied Armies of the World War.

Boy Crushed Under Truck; Driver Freed

4-Year-Old Youngster's Condition Said to Be Critical.

Manning Pendervis, 4, of 531 Twenty-third street northwest, was crushed beneath the wheels of a heavy truck at Fourteenth and H streets northeast yesterday.

Police said the boy was walking with his father and became confused in the traffic. He was taken to Gallinger Hospital by Jesse Parker, colored, 31, driver of the truck, and treated for internal injuries and fractures of both legs. Hospital attendants said his condition was critical.

Two-year-old Allen Compher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Compher, of 8504 Georgia avenue, suffered skull injuries late yesterday when he toddled into the rear fender of an automobile driven by Harry R. Smith, of 6915 Sixth street northwest.

Meanwhile, two motorists were exonerated from blame in the recent traffic deaths of Mrs. Anastasia Quay, 73, of 5502 Thirteenth street northwest, and George W. Smith, 57, of 30 F street northwest.

In the first inquest, Policeman J. H. Hasty, of the Sixth Precinct, driver of the Sixth Precinct scout car, which struck Mrs. Quay near her home October 11, was absolved when witnesses testified the woman walked into the street in front of his machine.

Robert Taylor, of Riverdale, Md., was released from further prosecution by the coroner's jury in the death of George Smith. The jury was told Smith walked out from behind parked cars into the path of Taylor's car.

Hand That Lost Its Mummy

Says He Found Evidence of Advanced Culture on Islands.

Hair-raising adventures on fog-bound islands in the Bering Sea and explorations of mummy-filled caves under conditions which would daunt many men young enough to be his grandchildren, were described last night by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka.

Facing an audience of 500 in the National Museum auditorium, an audience that included Government clerks, priests, nuns and housewives, as well as scientists, the Smithsonian Institution's chief anthropologist disclosed the results of his annual visits to the Kodiak and Aleutian Islands last summer.

The 67-year-old race detective reported the finding and recovery of mummies and artifacts which indicate culture was far advanced among the inhabitants of these islands 2,000 years ago, perhaps longer.

His Eighth Trip.

This was the eighth trip of Dr. Hrdlicka to Kodiak and the Aleutians, which stretch westward toward Asia, starting from the Alaskan peninsula. And in many respects, he said last night, it was the most successful of them all.

Beautifully carved objects, including portraitures in ivory and bone, which were dug up on Kodiak Island, may be evidence of an advanced civilization that was flourishing when Christianity was young, the scientist said. The skeletons found with them are the remains of aborigines who may have migrated from the Aleutians, he believes.

But it was the mummy caves, located in one of the tiniest of the Aleutian Islands, that gave Dr. Hrdlicka and his party of college student volunteers their greatest thrill. Although many of the mummies had been badly damaged by foxes, several were in a sufficiently good state of preservation to be removed and prepared for exhibition in the National Museum, where they are today.

The caves also yielded many interesting artifacts, including wooden plates, which the anthropologist believes were used as containers for offerings to departed souls.

"We found it very hard to tear ourselves away," said Dr. Hrdlicka, although he and his party continually risked broken bones by entering and working in the dark and tortuous caves and carrying their prizes to the boat over slopes so rocky that a slip meant injury.

Much More to Learn.

Already he is making plans for the 1937 excursion, Dr. Hrdlicka said, and he hopes to gather further materials and information which will support his theory that our American Indians descended from Asiatics, who crossed the Bering Sea in skinboats many centuries ago.

"There are so many things yet to be seen, so much more to be learned," said the Bohemian-born anthropologist, who is a physician, pathologist, archeologist and philosopher as well.

Leading again a party of husky college youths, who pay their own expenses, he wants not only to return to the Aleutians, but to continue onward to the Commander Islands, which are only a few score miles off the mainland of Asia.

For as the white haired searcher after the truth declared:

"We have not yet reached our goal."

Citizens Favor Miss Bradshaw For Principal

Miss May P. Bradshaw, assistant principal of Roosevelt High School, last night received indorsement of the Petworth Citizens Association for the post of principal, when Allan Davis retires next month.

In another resolution the association took a stand against action by the Federation of Citizens Association calling upon the Capital Transit Co. to buy 300 new street cars.

The Petworth Association stated in its resolution that while it did not favor one-man cars or the continuance in service of obsolete cars it did not believe that putting such a great burden on the company would be feasible. Gradual replacement of old equipment with new was suggested.

Esther Norton, 17-year-old blond student at Roosevelt High School, was selected by the association to represent it in the Halloween contest for a queen for the city-wide celebration. She lives at 1205 Delafield street northwest.

Spooners Frowned On

Couples occupying parked automobiles in Anacostia Park last night occasioned a resolution adopted by the Southeast Council of Citizens Associations.

The resolution called for the newly elected secretary, Orrin Davy, to write a letter to Capt. P. J. Carroll, park police commander, asking that he instruct his men to break up flagrant love-making in the park.

Other new officers elected last night were William A. Maio, president; Ernest J. Read, vice president, and C. A. Barker, treasurer.

Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, president of the Board of Education, spoke outlining the proposed five-year school building program, which the council went on record as indorsing.

Two new delegates from the Anacostia Citizens Association, W. H. Benhoff, jr., and James G. Thompson, were seated.

One-Man Cars Hit

Condemnation of one-man street cars was voiced in a resolution last night by the West End Citizens Association, in session at Kidder Hall, 822 Twentieth street northwest.

The association also went on record as indorsing Judge Nathan Caton's plan for a small claims court. Objection to unduly loud and persistent tooting of automobile horns was scored in another resolution.

Robert D. Lyons was named president of the group. Other officers chosen included Charles L. Norris, first vice president; J. H. Gerone, second vice president; F. W. Dowling, third vice president; William R. Brown, treasurer, and Almon C. Barber, secretary; Norris and Lyons were elected delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Capt. Kelly to Talk

Capt. Lloyd E. Kelly, new commander of the Eighth Precinct, will address the Chevy Chase Citizens Association at its meeting in the E. V. Brown School tonight at 8 o'clock.

4 Fingers Hunting Mummy in Hand Of Post Reporter

This is the story of four fingers looking for their mummy.

The first chapter was written yesterday when Jefferson D. Brooks, a lawyer with offices at 514 F street northwest, frightened a courthouse reporter out of his wits by tossing a human hand in his lap.

It seems the separated member once was attached to the mummy of a young woman. A Washingtonian found it in a shipment of museum pieces shipped here from New York. He is a client of Brooks' and turned the object over to him as part of an attorney's fee.

The lawyer passed it on to the press yesterday. The mummified hand appears to have been yanked off its owner's right arm, possibly by a vandal. The little finger is missing.

Roscoe Conklin, The Post's court reporter whom Brooks chose to be custodian of the gruesome souvenir, was occupied last night plotting some means of getting rid of it.

Women of Bar Join Criminal Justice Group

The Women's Bar Association of the District last night voted to join the Washington Criminal Justice Association after hearing James H. Hepbron, acting director, describe crime conditions and outline the purpose of the association.

Addressing the Mayflower Hotel meeting of the women attorneys, Hepbron told them, "crime doesn't pay; it collects."

To prove this statement, he said records prove only one thief in ten ever is brought to court and that after brought to trial the thief has additional odds in his favor through aid of unprincipled attorneys, political and other influence, continuances, etc.

The criminal justice association, Hepbron said, proposes to follow every case through court, to see that it is handled with justice and dispatch and, if it is not, to arouse indignant public opinion.

Mrs. Vera Rhine, one of the city's two women bank cashiers, was elected treasurer of the bar association to succeed Mrs. Sara M. Williams, who resigned.

President to Join Rites at Howard U.

President Roosevelt and Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes will play leading parts in the ceremonies dedicating the new $625,000 chemistry building erected by the PWA for Howard University, it was announced yesterday.

The dedication will be held Monday at 4:30 p. m., with the university's student body of 2,000 attending.

Western Beats Roosevelt, 19-6, in 42d Interhigh Series Opener

Victors Show Varied Style Of Attack

Work of Kollmyer, Moore Carries Burden for Rough Riders.

By John R. Vosburgh.

The forty-second inter-high football series opened yesterday at Western Stadium where some 2,000 spectators watched Western High get off to a flying start with a 19-6 victory over Roosevelt High.

While neither team showed much to cause Central's inter-high champions a great deal of worry, Western occasioned mild surprise by displaying a resourceful repertoire of plays not typical of usual Western teams. Calling on reverses, double reverses, laterals and double laterals, the Red team looked similar to recent Western teams only because of its jerseys.

Roosevelt came through as well as it did because of its plucky quarterback, Bob Kollmyer, who was virtually all the offensive and most of the defensive. Harry Moore, husky center, was the sole other Roosevelt standout. The Rough Riders featured poor tackling almost from start to finish with the exception of Kollmyer and Moore and one or two other instances.

The running and passing of Leonard Weinstein and Morris Snead, of Western, formed the spearhead of the Red offensive, Weinstein passing for two touchdowns and Snead ripping off numerous gains, one of them scoring the third touchdown from the 11-yard line.

Western Threatens.

Western threatened seriously twice in the first quarter before scoring. Fred Mundy intercepted a pass by Weinstein on his own 6-yard line and ran 34 yards to end the first one, and soon afterward Roosevelt ended another Western drive by holding for downs on its 17-yard line.

On the third drive, however, Western scored, marching 46 yards. A lateral with Weinstein on the receiving end picked up 17 yards and Snead gained 6 yards, to put the ball on the 23-yard-line. Weinstein then passed to Don Niklason, who took the toss on the 10-yard line and ran over for the touchdown. Weinstein rushed the extra point.

A 67-yard punt by Kollmyer to the Western 3-yard line gave Roosevelt a big gain on a kicking exchange, and the Rough Riders drove to its touchdown in the next quarter from Western's 29-yard line. Kollmyer passed to Paul Dunbar for 9 yards and then plunged for a first down on the 17-yard line. Mundy added 7 more yards and Kollmyer made it a first down on the 8-yard line. The quarterback then callled for his scoring play and Bill Richards spun over on a neat reverse for the touchdown. Joe Kolker's place-kick attempt was blocked.

Punt Aids in Goal.

A punt by Snead to the Roosevelt one-yard line paved the way for Western's second touchdown in the last quarter. Snead returned Kollmyer's punt 15 yards to the Roosevelt 25 and Western then drove to the 7-yard line only to be penalized to the 22-yard line. Weinstein then coolly passed to Tommy O'Hanlon after two passes had failed and the receiving end of the Abie's Irish Rose combination took the toss on the goal line for the touchdown. Snead's drop-kick was wide.

The third touchdown came after Weinstein had intercepted Kollmyer's pass on the Roosevelt 45. Wtih Weinstein and Snead ripping off the yardage and Blackie Brewer adding four yards to put the ball on the 11-yard line, the Red team scored again when Snead raced off the Roosevelt left tackle for the touchdown. Weinstein's pass for the extra point was incomplete.

Roosevelt's only semblance of a threat after its touchdown came in the third quarter when it had the ball after a punting exchange on the Western 37, but Snead intercepted a pass by Bill Hammett and ran 35 yards to end it quickly.

McClung Is Named V. M. I. Ring Coach

Lexington, Va., Oct. 20 (AP).—William A. McClung, of Charlottesville, was today elected boxing coach at V. M. I., according to Maj. Blandy Clarkson, athletic director.

McClung was a regular for three years on the crack University of Virginia ring team. He also boxed with the Cavalier freshmen and for four years at Augusta Military Academy before entering the university.

The new coach will report for duty next week to start fall practice with the Cadet boxers.

Middies Work On Plays for Princeton

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 20.—Preparing for Saturday's game against Princeton, the Navy varsity worked this afternoon against the strong plebe team, using chiefly the forward, lateral and combination pass plays which were introduced in the Yale game, with some variations.

Sneed Schmidt, suffering from a slight indisposition, was not on the field this afternoon, and Bill Ingram did not start with the varsity, their places being taken by Fay Wilsie and Lem Cooke. Bob Antrim and Frank Case completed the first team backfield.

The ball was carried about equally by Antrim, Wilsie and Cooke, all three being effective in the pass plays. Three or four plays were along this line, but when straight line plays were tried, the powerful plebe line generally stopped them.

Cooke is the best of the running backs sent up by the plebe class of last year, and is steadily improving both as a runner and passer. Art Franks, another plebe of last year, is proving of equal value as a blocking and defensive back. He weighs 210 pounds, and is the heaviest of the Navy backfield men.

Irwin Fike, regular end last year who had been on the hospital list until Saturday, when he played a short time against Yale, was in his regular place, with Zeke Soucek on the other flank. Fike had no trouble this afternoon and should be available regularly in the future, alternating with Heber Player.

Army Back Contracts Pneumonia in Contest

Though hospital attaches said Wilson was "a very sick boy," his name was not on the danger list.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 20.—Drawings for the annual field trials of the Hagerstown Field Trial Club will be made Friday night at a moose dinner to be given at a local hotel. The moose is being furnished by Roger Q. Cook, local sportsman, who recently returned with a 1,400-pound moose he shot this fall in Wyoming.

Movie of Game Implies Kelley's Kick Intended

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 20.—Movies of the Yale-Navy game played in Baltimore Saturday were scanned with interest by the football staff at the Naval Academy, and seem to show, they declared, that Larry Kelley approached the ball fumbled by Sneed Schmidt, made no effort to fall on or recover it and kicked it straight toward the Navy goal.

Kelley, in a somewhat crouched position, approached the ball, according to the slowed movie pictures and gave it a strong kick right in the direction of the goal, the kick covering about 27 yards from the 30-yard line to the 3-yard point.

No one connected with Naval Academy football has made any published criticism of the referee's decision, but the feeling is general that there was no possible authority under the rules for allowing Yale to benefit by the ground covered by the kick, it is held that the worst that could properly have been done to the Navy was to give the ball to Yale at the point where it was kicked.

100-Yard Pass Is Gael Asset

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 20.—Tom Foudy, St. Mary's football press agent, stampeded the New York football writers' weekly luncheon meeting today with tales of the Galloping Gaels.

Edward "Slip" Madigan, the Gaels' guide, sends him ahead to "build up" the other team. The bell ringers are down for an engagement with Fordham in the Polo Grounds Saturday.

"Once," he said, "Slip told me to tell Tom Lieb to 'build up' his Loyola team on the Coast. 'Tell him to do something about it so that it will look like an even-Stephen affair before the game,' he said. They almost beat us. So I'm not saying anything this time."

"We've got a halfback, Lester Groux (pronounced Grew)—we call him 'just' Groux—who is the greatest forward passer in the game," proclaimed Foudy. "He can throw that ball 80 yards without the aid of a wind and 90 to 100 yards with a slight following breeze."

Balsamo New Ring Bonanza

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 20.—Mike Jacobs, who has made a fortune with Joe Louis, is getting ready to reap another harvest of gold with the good right hand of young Harry Balsamo, the new middleweight sensation.

Since the former subway brakeman deftly polished off Eric Seelig with a startling one-round knockout last week to place himself definitely for his services have poured in from every direction.

Even the Far West, where Freddie Steele, ruler of the 160-pound division, makes headquarters, is bidding for a glimpse of the lad whose hitting is compared to that of the Brown Bomber.

Jacobs, who tied Louis to a long-term contract the moment the Negro showed signs of developing into a box office attraction, has done the same with Balsamo.

For the next five years the Italian will do all his fighting for Jacobs. Balsamo is owned and managed by two New York business men, but it will be up to the head of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club to say when, where and who the youngster fights.

Rose Began Auto Racing in Crash

Diminutive Star Is Long on Courage, Short on Superstition

By Bill McCormick.

The 100 pounds of person behind the 30 pounds of mustach protested vehemently as someone blew out a match to keep him from being the third to light on one flame.

"That superstition stuff is all bunk," insisted Mauri Rose, for that was the 130 pounds of person and upper-lip adornment. "Here I am, an automobile racing driver who takes chances, and you never do anything more hazardous than punch at a typewriter which can't punch back—and you're superstitious, and I'm not."

Under a grilling cross-examination, the little feller who zoomed across the automotive racing industry a few years ago—and, still is zooming—admitted he had one superstition, but only one.

"I won't walk under a ladder," he finally confessed after a severe third degree, 'but that isn't because I'm always afraid that something will drop off the ladder onto my noggin."

What manner of man is this that can every year risk his neck on the Indianapolis Speedway with such flagrant disregard of the ordinary rules of superstition?

SPEEDSTER ROSE.

In the first place, Rose is perhaps the most inconspicuous individual that ever sat behind a steering wheel. He is so unnoticeable that one might almost suspect him of being a G-Man. Short, instead of tall; a featherweight instead of a heavyweight; quiet instead of boastful—he is the exact antithesis of the ordinary conception of a rip-roaring knight of the dusty road.

Mauri, it seems, became a race driver along about 1927 through a series of circumstances. He was a mechanic in a garage in Columbus, Ohio, in which much work was done in stepping up motors for sheriffs, bootleggers and what-not. In this capacity, Mauri finally became a very good mechanic—and developed a yen for motorcycle racing.

One of the other mechanics became interested in automobile racing and finally financed a car. The financier for his venture did not like that particular mechanic as a driver and agreed to build the speed buggy only if another driver

Gophers Due To Lose Two —Bierman

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Oct. 20.—Who will stop Minnesota's Galloping Gophers?

Coach Bernie Bierman points to the five remaining games on the schedule and says, "Take your pick—take a couple of picks."

In fact, Mr. Bierman has been trying from the start of the season to convince the grid experts that "the Gophers will lose at least three games."

The law of averages will be on the side of Purdue, Northwestern, Iowa, University of Texas and Wisconsin when the Gophers aim their slashing power attack, aided by half a dozen fleet backs, at these foes. Minnesota defeated the Washington Huskies, Nebraska and Michigan so far this season. string now stands at 20 straight wins and 27 games without defeat. They were tied in 1933.

Pressure Is Great.

The pressure of adding to that record undoubtedly weighs heavily on the thundering herd, and additional pressure is heaped on them by each succeeding foe, pointing all season at just one thing—to knock off those Gophers.

Even Minnesota fans, used to seeing the 1934 and 1935 Gopher machine run up high scores, asked if "the Gophers were slipping" when they just edged by Washington 14 to 7 and Nebraska 7 to 0. They forgot the Gophers were playing two of the top flight teams of the Nation.

The "blues-singing" Bierman gets the jitters when anyone suggests that Minnesota "ought to get by now" for the rest of the season without a loss.

"We scheduled eight major games this season," Bierman said, "and there isn't one on that schedule that isn't or wasn't capable of beating us. We don't even have a 'breather' in which to experiment. As for winning the rest of these——."

Material Is Answer.

"What keeps Minnesota going?" Bierman was asked.

"Great material," was his reply. "Grand material can make a coach look great—but if the material isn't there you just can't build a winner."

But Bierman is a trifle too modest. Much of the success of the Gophers is due to the fine blocking that Bierman drills into every man and then the precision, finesse and exacting duties that he requires from each man.

Blocking was what pulled Minnesota through in the Nebraska game. With the score 0 to 0 and only 68 seconds left, Bud Wilkinson took a Nebraska punt and lateraled to Andy Uram. When Andy started that famous 79-yard run for a touchdown to win the game, the Gophers started blocking out the opposition so effectively that when Andy still had 55 yards to go there was only one man left who had a chance at him—and he was blocked out on the 25-yard line. Only time will tell when the Gophers "get the ax."

Series Fans Paid $120,439 in Taxes

By the Associated Press.

Baseball fans who saw this year's World Series, the Internal Revenue Bureau reported today, handed over $120,439.90 in amusement taxes.

This figure set a new record for receipts from the World Series under the present 10 per cent admission tax. It compared with $107,379.40 last year and $71,357.70 in 1932, when the levy first was effective.

Gilbert, Top in 1932, Will Ride for Whitney

New York, Oct. 20 (AP).—Johnny Gilbert, America's leading jockey in 1932 when he rode 212 winners, has signed to ride for John Hay Whitney next year.

The Pittsburg, Kans., veteran piloted only 71 winners last year but starting the middle of this season he regained his old-time form and has ridden close to 140 victors since January 1. When at his best, Gilbert has few peers aboard 2-year-olds and is considered a master at rating a tired horse.

Gehrig Admits Zest For Role of Tarzan

Lou Dead Serious About Plan; Seen as Box Office Magnet.

By the United Press.

New York, Oct. 20.—Lou Gehrig, the iron man of baseball and the most valuable player in the American League this year, propped his feet up on a desk, sucked on his pipe and blushed today as he said:

"Sure, I'd like to play Tarzan in the movies."

"But," he said, "I'm dead serious about the whole thing. I've always hustled at everything I've taken up. This is a new field and I'm willing to take a whirl at it. In fact, anxious."

Of course, the man who hasn't missed playing in a single game since he broke in with the New York Yankees a dozen years ago isn't packing up and taking off for Hollywood yet. Because the whole scheme is just an "idea."

Matinee Idol?

The venture started three weeks ago when Christy Walsh, Lou's business manager, read where Sol Lesser, head of the Principal Productions, was casting about for someone to play the role of Tarzan in a new series. The newspaper item said Lesser was dickering for Glenn Morris, Olympic decathlon winner, to take up where Johnny Weismuller and Buster Crabbe left off.

So Walsh wrote Lesser, extolling Gehrig's virtues:

"His facial features are ten times more attractive than Weismuller's." Walsh's letter said. ". . . He would be a tremendous box office attraction, especially to women . . . Lou is a natural because of his title of baseball's iron man."

Walsh received an answer from Lesser saying they never had even considered Gehrig for the part. But Lesser said Lou should forward some pictures because "we've only seen him in baseball pants." The pictures—showing Lou is a hairy-chested giant—were sent today.

Wouldn't Be Nervous.

The next move is up to Lesser. And Lou said he's prepared to dash right out there and get to work if they want him.

Lou took a lot of kidding from the band of baseball reporters who gathered in Walsh's office today. And before the interview had ended, all the writers agreed Gehrig would do okeh if given the chance. That's how serious the giant diamond star impressed them.

"I'm not an actor," Lou said. "But I could learn. I photograph well—much better than I look. I've talked on the radio a lot and was a success. So why couldn't I play Tarzan?

"Standing in front of a camera wouldn't make me nervous, not after those crowds I've faced on the baseball field. It's a new field and I want to take a chance at it.

"I'm willing to do business anytime they are."

Scott, Rivers Fight At Arena Monday

A couple of crowd-pleasing lightweights will swap punches next Monday night at Turner's Arena, where Cowboy Howard Scott, king of the local boys at his weight, will meet California Joe Rivers, the hard-hitting little Mexican, who has found much favor with District fans.

It will be their second meeting, Scott having won the nod in their first encounter at Baltimore about a year ago, and Rivers since then has been on the go too much to permit a rematch. He is just returned from California, where he participated in several bouts with no small degree of success.

Open Attack Is Planned By G. W.

Georgetown Girds for N. Y. U.; Maryland Nearing Peak.

George Washington's gridders will turn their bag of tricks inside out and upside down Friday night at Griffith Stadium where they play their last night game of the season against Wake Forest, Coach Jim Pixlee announced yesterday. Everything goes—all the passes, laterals and black magic prepared for earlier foes and unused because of poor weather, will be turned loose on the unsuspecting Deacons, and for good reason.

A new line of attack is being prepared for the Rice game a week later and little, if anything, of the material used in the first four games will be saved for the Owls, hence the boys may as well open up against Wake Forest. They tipped their hand on most of the plays in the first three games, rendering them valueless for use against Rice.

Primed for Bear.

In the second place Pixlee knows Wake Forest will play over its collective head in trying to take the Colonials for a ride, and intends to be well prepared to thwart their plans. "Hobo" Daniel, star punter, and Walter Kitchen, ace passer of the visiting team, are the twin sparkplugs of Wake Forest's attack, but Pixlee hopes to have his own backs ready to outdo this pair.

The Colonials spent the better part of yesterday's drill on defensive tactics, working against the freshmen who used Wake Forest plays. But they also managed to get some time in on their own attack which will be varied and mystifying—they hope.

A party of 30 Catholic University football players leave tonight at midnight for Oxford, Miss., where they play the Rebels Saturday in a game shaping up as the toughest on their schedule.

Everybody but "Spec" Foley, who is out with an injured shoulder, is in good physical trim. "Dixie" Walker, whose field generalship against De Paul last week was superb, prob-

ILL-TIMED PUNT

Macon, Ga., Oct. 20 (AP).—Fullback Gene Askew emerged unhurt from a Lanier High School football game Friday, but was put out of action Saturday by a nightmare.

Askew said he fell out of bed and rammed his left foot through a window in what he vaguely remembers as an effort to punt. Several stitches were required to close the lacerations and he will be on crutches for a week or more.

Miss Brown Ties Mrs. Meckley for Low Gross in 'Field Day' Golf

Mrs. Medley Takes Low Net Prize

By Dave Herman.

Further evidence that she is a factor in Washington golf was presented yesterday by 18-year-old Marion Brown, of Manor, when she tied Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring, for low gross honors with an 87 in the annual "field day" fiesta staged at Congressional Country Club in compliment to members of the first and second teams of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association.

Semifinalist in the Middle Atlantic championship last week at Elkridge Hunt Club, Miss Brown carded 45-42, with a 4-putt green at the third and a 3 on the home hole. Mrs. Meckley was out in 43 and home in 44, her par 4 on the eighteenth enabling her to tie the young Manor sensation.

The chief low net prize, as far as the first-team players were concerned, went to Mrs. C. P. Medley, of Manor, who had 92—10—82. Mrs. Bishop Hill, of Chevy Chase, with 89—6—83, and Mrs. Y. E. Booker, also of Chevy Chase, 90—7—83, tied for second low net.

Mrs. Bullock Has Low Net.

Mrs. J. H. Bullock, of Indian Spring, had the lowest net among the first-team captains by reason of her 104—15—89.

Mrs. Will S. Masten, of Washington Golf and Country Club, monopolized the spotlight in the second-team tournament, her 94 winning low gross prize.

Mrs. George Parker, of Kenwood, with 99—15—84, was the low net winner. In the second-team captain battle Mrs. C. T. Penn, of Congressional, 104—17—87, tied with Mrs. E. M. Amick, of Columbia, but Mrs. Penn won in the draw.

Over at Chevy Chase the third teams gathered, with Miss Kate Scully, of the host club, winning the medal with 101; Mrs. R. E. Joyce, of Kenwood, the low net with 109—27—82, and Mrs. Oscar Coolican, of Chevy Chase, the team captain low net with 104—20—84.

The itinerary, or as much of it as known last night, includes a stop in Knoxville tomorrow afternoon and workouts in the University of Tennessee stadium. Departing at 7:55 p. m., the squad is scheduled to arrive in Memphis early the following morning.

Practice at Georgetown was so secret Line Coach "Mush" Dubofsky had a hard time gaining admission to the inclosure shielding the squad from the public view as work progressed for the New York University game. The varsity scrimmaged the freshmen who were armed with New York plays and escaped without injury.

Tickets for the game (to be played in New York) can be obtained at the Georgetown athletic office until Thursday afternoon. Reserved seats sell for $2.20 and box seats $3.30. Tickets for two special trains leaving at 1 p. m. and 4 p. m. Friday also can be obtained at the office for $8.

Maryland's varsity also scrimmaged the freshmen yesterday in getting a line on Syracuse plays. The Terps figure to stop the disorganized Orangemen without undue difficulty, especially with Bill Guckeyson back in the line-up and the line showing continual improvement.

Yankee Pitcher to Take a Bride

John Broaca, Yale graduate who made good as a pitcher with the New York Yankees, pictured with his fiancee, Miss Frances Ireland, of Orleans, Mass.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Down at Duke University folks are paying little mind to the Southern Conference ruling which forbids post-season football games. If, perchance, Duke completes its schedule undefeated and is invited to Pasadena for the January 1 Rose Bowl game, then the conference rule won't hold the Blue Devils back.

POVICH.

Duke was a party to the agreement last fall when post-season games were officially frowned upon by the conference, but the lure of the Rose Bowl is almost certain to cause the Blue Devils to break their conference ties, if necessary, in order to accept.

Ever since Alabama, Auburn, Tennessee, Tulane, Louisiana State and other former powers in the old Southern Conference broke away and formed the Southeastern Conference, Duke was left without real conference competition. In recent seasons, Duke has come to feel itself too big for its present alliance with such as the Carolinas, the Virginia colleges, Maryland, Furman, Clemson, etc., and has no particular relish for what they call such small-time rivalry.

The two Carolina teams, N. C. U. and N. C. State are the only colleges worthy of mention in the same inhalation with Duke in the football scale and the Southern Conference title has ceased to be the main concern of the Blue Devils who are on the hunt for larger game.

Safely over the Georgia Tech hurdle, Duke now faces a schedule that holds little prospect of a defeat for the Blue Devils. In stride, they are expected to take Tennessee, Washington and Lee, Wake Forest and Carolina and Carolina State. A beating by one of these teams would be no less than a shocking upset, but a clean slate for Duke would be a powerful recommendation for the Rose Bowl invitation.

But any bid to Duke that may come from the Rose Bowl people will be inspired even more by the presence of Wallace Wade at the Durham college. Coach Wade is something of a legendary figure on the Pacific Coast and folks there are itching for another glimpse of one of his teams. If it narrowed down to a close choice between Duke and another Eastern team, Wade's team would doubtless get the invitation.

Because, a Wade-coached team has never been beaten in a Rose Bowl game. Three times he took Alabama teams to the Coast and the best the Western representative could get against Alabama in a Rose Bowl game was a tie. That was achieved by Stanford. Wade-coached teams beat both Washington and Washington State and the fact that Wade is coaching Duke may easily sway the invitation toward the Blue Devils.

Endowed by the tobacco millions of the Duke family, the Durham college went big-time in football a half-dozen years ago. One of its first acts was to outbid Alabama for the coaching services of Wade at a time when it appeared that no offer that Alabama would not meet would be made. Two years ago only the Georgia Tech game stood between Duke and the Rose Bowl. Wade's team couldn't get by that one. But no team on the remainder of its schedule appears capable of upsetting the Duke apple cart this season.

In Short—

The football coach of one of the Capital's colleges who has been bemoaning his luck at missing out on the head coaching job at Minnesota is now in disrepute . . . the only reason he lost the appointment at Minnesota, he said, was because he is a Catholic . . . but a Washington sports writer, in Chicago recently, attended mass with none other than Bernie Bierman, who was given the Minnesota job . . . haw! . . . Western High School's second touchdown against Roosevelt yesterday, scored on a pass, was an Abie's Irish Rose affair—Weinberg to O'Hanlon . . . on his record this season, Tom Keating, G. U. back, is good for almost a first down every time he carries the ball . . . in 41 running attempts he has gained 361 yards for an average of 9 yards on each rush . . . North Carolina U. is the gem of consistency on the football field this season . . . in each of its three games, N. C. U. has scored exactly 14 points . . . at the end of last season, Washington college football teams were ranked as follows: .Catholic U., Maryland, Georgetown and George Washington . . . Here's how this department ranks 'em at this writing: George Washington, Georgetown, C. U. and Maryland.

Pros Shift Backs For Sunday Game

Willis Benner and Gene Augusterfer, mainstays in the Washington Pros' backfield, will shift posts Sunday when the Pros kick off to the Portsmouth Cubs in a Dixie League game at Griffith Stadium.

Until last Sunday, when Washington defeated Alexandria, 7-0, Augusterfer, a stellar quarterback at Catholic University in his college days, called signals for the team, but last week Benner took over the duties. He did well enough, but is re-installing Augusterfer at his regular position to give the team the advantage of his blocking.

D. C. Women Face Baltimore Golfers

An all-star team of 14 members of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association will meet a team from the Baltimore Golf Association this morning at Columbia Country Club.

Tee time is 10 o'clock, with Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring, District champion, and Marion Brown, of Manor, due to oppose Mrs. E. B. Morrow, of Elkridge, Middle Atlantic titleholder, and Elizabeth Janney, of Green Spring Valley, in the feature foursome.

Others who will play for the District team are Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, Miss Elizabeth Houghton, Mrs. Leo Walper, Mrs. Bishop Hill, Mrs. W. R. Bush, Mrs. Y. E. Booker, Mrs. Karl Giles, Mrs. Henry Brundage, Mrs. Howard Simons, Mrs. H. A. Knox, Mrs. Agnes Bowden, Mrs. C. P. Medley, Mrs. J. T. Powell, Mrs. J. W. Kramer and Mrs. Edward L. Reed.

Superstitions 'Are All Bunk To Rose

was found. Mauri's brother mechanic suggested Rose as a good pilot. Rose accepted before he knew what he was doing—and soon found himself in the seat of a jalloppy, entered in a real race.

"I crashed into the wall in that race," Mauri will tell you now. "But, I wasn't hurt. A few weeks later, I was in the same car in another race—and this time I crashed badly enough to land in the hospital for six weeks."

"'What the hell?' I asked myself. 'If other guys can do this, so can I.'"

In 1933, Rose was given an entry in the Indianapolis race, but was unable to qualify his car because of motor troubles until the last day. By special consent, he was allowed to attempt to do the necessary 10 laps at better than 100 miles an hour, the day before the race.

For nine laps he averaged better than 100 miles an hour, then something went blooey—and he went out. Another owner had qualified a very fast car, but the reguar driver was ruled off that night because of improper physical condition. Rose was given his entry, led the field until motor trouble forced him far back in the race—and thus began his Indianapolis career.

In 1934, Rose finished second—27 seconds behind Bill Cummings, the winner. That year Rose also was second in the National Championship ratings. This year, Mauri was the first American in the Roosevelt Raceway competition on Long Island. He wound up behind six foreign drivers, which is logical enough, once he explains it.

Foreigners Have Advantage.

"The foreigners figure to beat us at road racing for a few years," he explains, "because they have been doing only that kind of racing abroad for years. We are used to bowl racing, such as we get at Indianapolis, and are not prepared to break, make right-hand turns, or slow starts. In a few years our drivers—and equipment will be adjusted to the revived type of racing, and then we'll do something."

At present, Rose is driving a four-wheel drive car—the only one of its kind on the track. It was built in 1931 by the FWD Co., which makes trucks.

"When my company started making four-wheel drive trucks, it first was rumored that they were hard to handle," Rose elucidates, "So, they sent a flock of the smallest girls they could find out on the road to drive them. That broke up that unfair belief. Then it was said four-wheel drive trucks weren't safe on turns at high speeds. So, we built this race car to disprove that. We have."

Wannan's LongRun Wins for Friends

A 50-yard run for a touchdown by Left End Wannan gave Friends School's intermediate football team a 13-to-6 victory over Landon Prep's intermediates yesterday at Friends Field. The alert Quaker wingman caught a punt which had bounced from the hands of a Landon receiver in midfield and raced for the score in the fourth quarter.

Friends took a 6-to-0 lead in the first period when it marched 80 yards with Quarterback A. Newmyer skirting right end for the touchdown on a 20-yard run. Landon's 110-pounders scored late in the game when Dick Marsh went over from the 6-yard line for their sole touchdown.

Va. U. Primed For Test With Generals

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 20.—Virginia coaches stressed blocking and tackling again today as preparations went forward for the annual alumni homecoming game here Saturday with Washington and Lee.

Lapses in the fundamental arts played a major part in the rout by Maryland, although the Old Liners were primed for a victory and had their offensive power stepped up about 50 per cent with the return of Bill Guckeyson. Playing his first game of the season, Guckeyson was personally responsible for two of the three touchdowns scored against the Cavaliers last Saturday.

With improvement already noted in offensive mopping up assignments, Coach Tebell expects his attacking weapons to be working at a high rate of efficiency when the Generals come to Charlottesville for the main attraction in another gala week-end.

Hundreds of returning alumni will be feted at an all-day housewarming program Saturday at the new alumni hall, and those holding membership cards in the association will be admitted free to the annual fall dances Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

In addition to its obligation to the old grads, the Cavalier eleven has a long delayed account to settle for the students, most of whom have never seen a Virginia victory over Washington and Lee. They ceased in 1930, and in five straight defeats, Virginia has failed in any form of scoring against the Generals.

Jake Powell to Be Guest At Boys' Club Dinner

Jake Powell, World Series hero, will be a guest when the second annual New Members-Baseball Award Night is held at the Boys' Club tomorrow night.

Members of the Oates A. C. and B. C. Indians, winning teams on the Pewee and Insect leagues, will be presented silver baseballs and a club trophy.

Everett Receives Thomas Bout Offer

Buck Everett, heavyweight champion of the District, received an offer yesterday for a return bout with Otis Thomas, the Chicago colored heavyweight, who knocked him out in the first round of their fight earlier in the year.

Manager Jimmy Erwin, who received a long wire from Matchmaker Lew Raymond, of St. Louis, was not certain whether Everett would accept the offer or not. Erwin dislikes matching his protege with a fighter out of his class, Everett being a light heavyweight, while Thomas weighs 210.

Raymond's message emphasized that a victory for Everett over Thomas would pave the way for a fight with Joe Louis. Everett is in Washington training for a bout with Bob Olin, former light heavyweight champion.

Victorious over Marty Gallagher in their recent fight for the District title, Everett has been aiming for higher levels and for this reason there is a possibility he will accept the offer. It is the general consensus that Buck was the victim of a luncky punch in his first meeting with Thomas.

One-Sided Games Open Indoor Softball League

The recently organized Community Center Indoor Softball League inaugurated its season last night at Tech High School before an audience of several hundred fans with a couple of one-sided games.

Triple A's won over Veterans' Administration, 5-1, in the curtain-raiser, and Diamond Cab swamped Census Bureau, 20-4. There was plenty of sparkling baseball in both games despite the scores, however.

Tidewater Women Beat Richmond Links Team

Yorktown, Va., Oct. 20 (AP).—The Tidewater Women's Golf Association won a team match today from the Richmond Women's Golf Association, 30½ to 26½. The match was played over the historic Yorktown Country Club course with 38 swingers in the tournament field.

Fountain Pin Team Takes Long Lead

Cool's Fountain perched themselves solidly atop the Columbia Heights League last night at the Arcadia when they gained their ninth consecutive victory by a straight set decision over Premier Cab. Harry Aiken, veteran star of the Fountain boys, featured the match with a 151 game and 409 set, the latter the second best of the season. The leaders exhibited a first class brand of maple mauling to chalk up a 643 game, high so far this season, and a 1,773 total pinfall.

Andy Devlin, of Arcadia, also had a 151 game to share individual honors with Aiken.

Hartz Driv 'ur' Self entrenched themselves in second place with a clean sweep over Eagle Bedding Co.

Lorraine Gulli annexed individual laurels in the Washington Ladies' League, outscoring all competitors with a 122 game and 372 set. The Colonials' 546 game and the Nomads' 1,531 set topped the team scoring.

The Ladies' District League moves into its third week of competition tonight with nine teams gunning for the scalp of Galt Davis' Rooslyn girls, the league champions, who have yet to taste defeat this season. They will engage the Highway Engineers at the Rosslyn alleys.

Other matches for the night are National Beer and Lucky Strike, at Georgetown; R. E. A. Cleaners and Temple, at Temple; Swanee and Georgetown, at Lucky Strike, and Arcadia playing host to Convention Hall.

Norman Groth, rolling with Luther Place, toppled the maples for a sensational 158 game in the Lutheran Church (Men's) League last night at Arcadia. McGrory (Atonement) carried away the set with 385. Team honors went to Luther Place with a 581 game and St. Paul No. 1 with a 1,643 set.

'Tarzan,' Tarheel Rooter, Is About Best in the Country

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 20.—A million voices, pitched from low bass to high C, bellow and screech throughout the Nation's football stadiums these fall Saturday afternoon, but the greatest one-man cheering section of them all is the "Tarzan of Chapel Hill."

"Tarzan" is Lath Morris, a native Texan whose famous yell is as much a part of North Carolina football equipment as shoestrings. Down in Farmville, N. C., Lath works for a leaf tobacco farm firm during the week, leaves home for the football games on Saturday, and swings into his vocal stride.

He says it costs him more money to attend games than anybody in North Carolina because he has to buy his wife, who disapproves of his goings on, a $50 dress for every trip.

Weighing over 200 pounds and measuring about 6 feet, "Tarzan" is easy to spot in the stands or on the sidelines. On his chest he wears a gold football, presented to him for quarterback duty with the undefeated Blinn Memorial College team in Texas 14 years ago.

"Tarzan" announces his arrival in the stadium, just before the kick-off, by rising somewhere in the Tarheel student section and ripping off his far-famed barking screeech.

That yell, informs E. C. Daniel, of the Raleigh News and Observer, can be heard above a brace of bands, a set of blaring amplifiers and the combined whoops of two cheering sections.

"Tarzan" then strides down the center aisle, hurdles the stadium wall and strips for action. Off comes his overcoat, hat, coat, vest and necktie.

At the Duke-North Carolina State game at Raleigh last season, played on the coldest football day of the year, "Tarzan" mounted the cheer leaders' rostrum. Bets were laid in the press box that he wouldn't shed a stitch. But off came his clothes, right down to his shirt.

Only once was "Tarzan" restrained from strutting his stuff by police officers or field officials. At the Duke-Colgate game at Durham, he was squelched early in the first quarter.

"And I'll be darned if I ever yell for Duke again," he moaned.

Undaunted, he appeared the same night in Raleigh to lead the cheering at the Davidson-N. C. State game.

"Yeah, man," replied the students.

"What kind of lions?"

"Roaring lions!"

"No," roared Tarzan, "Carolina lions!"

Evening Tide Overtaken By Choice

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 20.—The Maemere Farm's MaeCloud boosted her stock for next Saturday's $10,000 added Selima Stakes by winning impressively over a field of her sex in the Bolivar Purse, feature race of today's program at this track.

The High Cloud filly had to be much the best to win, having none of the best of racing luck. She scored by a neck margin over E. D. Shaffer's Evening Tide, with Sweet Desire a like distance away. A field of nine answered the bugle.

Maecloud's ability was no secret and she marched postward the favorite at a $4.90 mutuel. She ran the mile route in 1:41 and probably can do much better.

Bit Independent, a Bradleyite, bumped Maecloud at the first turn and she was last before she recovered. Meanwhile, Veiled Lady and Evening Tide were fighting a pace-setting battle in which the latter was victorious. Evening Tide held sway from the far turn to the closing stages, but Maecloud circled the field and then answered Jockey Litzenberge's strong riding to be up in the closing strides.

Matey Wins Opener.

Sweet Desire closed with a rush on the inside, but too late to displace the tiring Evening Tide. Keyword, of the Vanderbilt entry, was headed for a high place in the money or a victory when she suddenly bolted away from Jockey L. Knapp's whip and finished fourth.

A crowd of 9,000 saw the action. Perfect racing weather prevailed.

Walter M. Jeffords' Matey, a speedy son of Man o' War, sprinted out of the maiden ranks in the opening event on the program. The colt scampered to the finish line four lengths in advance of A. Peleteri's Gerald, with the Shandon Farm's Gold Flag third in the group of 11 juvenile colts and geldings. Harry Richards rode Matey and the pair gained steadily from a slow beginning to open a long gap in the final stages. Gerald was away even more poorly than the winner and had to circle the field in the early stretch to gain a money position. Matey was a popular winner, paying $5.30 as the favorite. The time for the six furlongs was 1:13.

Duncan H. Read's Dundrillin won the day's steeplechase which drew a bulky field of 14 to contest over the 14 fences and at 2 miles. Ridden by Jockey J. McGovern, Dundrillin defeated A. B. Hagner's Flying Feathers by a length and a half. L. C. Leiths' Daffy, a member of the betting field, was third, four lengths away.

Dundrillin was in a threatening position from the beginning and after Budget Boy, Meredith and Flying Feathers had had their innings in front of the pack, Dundrillin moved up, approaching the thirteenth fence to go ahead to stay. Eleven finished the course. McKinley B. broke down during the second mile and was destroyed. Meredith fell and Quick Verdict lost his rider Dundrillin was only lukewarm in the wagering and paid a $15.90 mutuel. He completed the journey in 4:01 1-5.

Go Home Pays $11.70.

The black and white diamonds of the Maemere Farm were borne to victory in the third race by Go Home, an $11.70 betting proposition. The gelding showed the way to a field of the better sprinters and led Night Play to the wire by two lengths. Dancing Doll was a fast-closing third in the group of eight. Jockey De Camillis rode Go Home and the gelding ran out at the stretch turn. However, the jockey straightened him and Go Home came on to win. He ran the six furlongs in 1:12 3-5.

Hubert Le Blanc, the popular apprentice, rode a great race to win with Mrs. H. M. Pearson's Tiempo in the fourth race, fashioned for platers over the mile and 70 yards course. Far out of it on the run up the backstretch, Le Blanc sent his charge between horses to reach contention and then the mare came through with a closing rush that forced Sheknows, the pacesetter most of the way, into second money. Fluffy Lee was third. The winner paid a $19.40 mutuel and was clocked in 1:45 2-5.

Sea Gull brought Jockey E. De Camillis his second winner of the day in the seventh race, shaking off Skyride to take a length and a half decision over Chrysmute. Skyride hung on to take third money. The winner, owned by H. Neusteter, paid a $29 mutuel and ran the mile and 70 years in 1:45.

Eudes, paying $7.60, took the nightcap. More Pep was second and Golden Play third.

MATEY, lacking speed at the break, worked his way to the leaders steadily, took command with ease at the eighth pole and drew out while being taken in hand. GERALD, last out of the gates, raced wide and closed with excellent courage. GOLD FLAG shook off MANDINGHAM to get to the front and faltered under hustling tactics. GREY GOLD saved ground on the inside all the way and closed willingly. MR. WHITEHALL tired after racing forwardly. MANDINGHAM faltered in the closing quarter. MR. CANRON could not reach contention at any stage.

DUNDRILLIN, steadied over the jumps while within striking distance of the leaders for a mile, moved up to press the pace of FLYING FEATHERS, took command when put to the drive and held FLYING FEATHERS safe at the end. The latter, a forward factor throughout, made a bad landing at the tenth fence and continued gamely, but unable to resist the winner. DAFFY gained gradually during the second mile and closedc ourageously. WILFRED G. dropped back when Smoot lost stirrups going to first jump, recovered to gain sharply between the ninth and eleventh fences, but tired thereafter. JOHN POINDEXTER came full of run after being held under restraint for a mile. BUDGET BOY was through after setting the early pace. McKINLEY B. broke down and was pulled up approaching the twelfth fence. MEREDITH fell at the twelfth fence. QUICK VERDICT lost rider at the sixth fence.

GO HOME, hard ridden throughout, went wide entering the stretch, but was straightened in time to wear down NIGHT PLAY and win going away. The latter was sprinted to the front in the opening furlong, saved ground to the end and appeared to be in need of racing. DANCING DOLL, last away, came with a rush on the outside. BARTERING KATE came through on the inside to close resolutely. FRENCH PRINCESS tired after being in the thick of the early contention. MINEY MYERSON can do better. MUGGINS quit.

TIEMPO, allowed to race on own courage to the backstretch, was sent to the leaders gradually and came with a belated rush at the end under energetic handling. SHE KNOWS circled her field to gain command swinging for the backstretch, opened a gap, but tired suddenly in the final eighth. FLUFFY LEE, forwardly placed from the beginning, tired in the closing stages. MARJOLET gained with a rush turning for the stretch but bumped. MISS FERN could not threaten at any stage. BONNIE LOIS was rushed too much reaching contention after dwelling slightly at the break. FERVID could not keep up. THISTLE DINA, had brief early speed. BONNIE LOIS bled.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,200. The Bolivar. For 2-year-old fillies. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:34½. Off at 3:40½. Winner, Maemere Farm's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAECLOUD, $4.90, $3.40, $2.70; EVENING TIDE, $4.70, $3.60; SWEET DESIRE, $7.90.
MAECLOUD, much the best, was interfered with by BIT INDEPENDENT at the first turn, had to circle her field to reach contention entering the stretch and withstood a long drive gamely to be up in the concluding strides. EVENING TIDE disposed of VEILED LADY to take command leaving the backstretch and was tiring gradually at the close. SWEET DESIRE, slow to get under way, came with a belated rush on the inside approaching the end. KEYWORD, in close pursuit of the pace setters from the start, gained sharply in the early stretch and then bolted at the sixteenth pole. SUNCRAX started from outside the gates, was used up reaching contention. VEILED LADY tired. SWIFTPLY went well for a quarter.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:06½. Off at 4:09½. Winner, A. C. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SCATTER BRAIN, $12.00, $4.70, $3.60; ALADDIN'S DREAM, $5.50, $3.60; TOP DOG, $3.10.
SCATTER BRAIN, rated along while close to the pace, rallied when put to drive and disposed of TOP DOG to hold ALADDIN'S DREAM safe. The latter, slow as usual to strike best stride, raced on own courage to the far turn, came through on the inside with a rush, but hung in the final eighth. TOP DOG ran COEQUEL into defeat, but faltered. COEQUEL stopped. HOLLYHOCK was away poorly and showed a dull effort. DARK WINTER could not keep up.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:39½. Off at 4:44½. Winner, H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SEA GULL, $29.00, $11.50, $7.40; CHRYSMUTE, $4.50, $2.90; SKYRIDE, $5.60.
SEA GULL, rated along with the pace of SKYRIDE, took command leaving the backstretch and was kept to a stout drive to the end. CHRYSMUTE, carried wide at the first turn by LILLIAN Z., came with a belated rush and Boucher sent her between horses at the end. SKYRIDE, rushed to the front on the outside in the first furlong, was stoutly handled throughout and held on willingly. SLEEK was closest to the leaders to the stretch and gained some ground on the inside. MINNA could not threaten when placed to drive.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:10½. Off at 5:11½. Winner, Mrs. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—EUDES, $7.60, $4.30, $3.90; MORE PEP, $4.10, $3.00; GOLDEN PLAY, $5.40.
EUDES, closest to the pace of FLOWER TIME after the opening furlong, took command when the pacemaker faltered and came again after being displaced by MORE PEP inside the eighth pole. MORE PEP rallied sharply to go to the front, but faltered suddenly. GOLDEN PLAY gained steadily from a slow beginning. TUNEFUL went evenly, but failed to threaten. STRATEGEM stopped after a half. FLOWER TIME quit after being rushed while setting the pace.

Retail Trade For October Up 20 Per Cent

With Lower Wholesale and Higher Retail Prices Profits Increase.

New York, Oct. 20.—Steady improvement in retail trade this year and the definitely favorable prospects augur well for the profits of the majority and the better situated retail firms for 1936, Standard Statistics Co. says today.

Despite disappointing reports during the early weeks of September, department-store sales expanded sharply during the last ten days of the month, and gains ranging from 7 per cent to 21 per cent were scored all over the country. The average improvement amounted to 14 per cent. Variety chains also showed a marked betterment, with sales rising approximately 12 per cent, while mail order concerns continued to lead the field with a gain in excess of 32 per cent.

Trade continued brisk during the first half of October, stimulated by cooler weather and the large amount of moving which took place, which increased sales of furniture and home furnishings. For the full month, sales gains running as high as 20 per cent are expected. The best Christmas season since 1929 is in prospect.

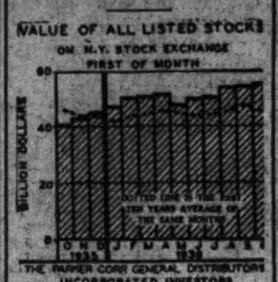
As retail prices are currently 1.2 per cent higher than at the beginning of the year and wholesale prices slightly below the January 1 levels, profit margins of department stores, variety chains and mail-order concerns have widened. This spread has been aided by the increased sales, which have kept inventories clean and prevented excessive markdowns. Consequently, substantial expansion in the net incomes of the majority of the better situated mail order and department store concerns are probable.

Electric Boat Votes First Dividend

New York, Oct. 20 (AP).—Electric Boat Co. announced today a dividend of 60 cents on its capital stock, marking the first distribution to stockholders since organization in 1925. It is payable December 5 to stock of record November 20.

The company manufactures submarine and power boats, marine engines and electrical equipment and has properties at Groton, Conn., and Bayonne, N. J.

Stocks are 3½ Times Depression Low Mark



Boston, Oct. 20.—Eighteen months of steady upward climb with but one backward step is the performance of the market value of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. In the year from October 1, 1935, the total value increased 36 per cent, or to 3½ times the depression bottom. In spite of this gain, stock values have gone only 53 per cent of the way from the depression low to the heights of 1929.

Dr. Cook Addresses Life Underwriters

At the monthly meeting of the District of Columbia Underwriters held yesterday at the Willard Hotel, Dr. Henry W. Cook, medical director of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., Minneapolis, was the guest speaker. His topic was "Medical Understanding From the Agents' Point of View."

DR. H. W. COOK.

Dr. Cook, who has been medical director for this company since 1906, and vice president since 1913, has made many notable contributions to the science of medical selection. He was the first director to use the blood pressure machine in life insurance examinations before the Association of Life Insurance Examining Surgeons of which he was at that time president, in 1904. He also invented the first blood pressure machine sold in this country in 1902.

The president of the association, Lawrence H. Riggles, was in the chair.

Flour Demand Helps to Lift Wheat Prices

Purchases by Importing Countries Begin to Decline.

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 20.—Wheat prices averaged slightly higher today, helped by some improvement of milling demand here. For the most part, however, the wheat trade was virtually just marking time, with no decided movement of values either up or down.

There was only a light volume of business, and the extremes of fluctuations kept within a range of less than a cent a bushel. It was estimated that export takings of Canadian wheat amounted to but 500,000 bushels.

Wheat futures in Chicago closed irregular, ¾ lower to ⅝ higher compared with yesterday's finish, December 114⅝@114½, May 113⅝@113¼, July 98⅜@98⅛, corn unchanged to ½ up, December 93⅝@93½, May 89⅛@89¼, July 86, oats at ⅛ decline to ⅜ advance, December 40¼, and rye unchanged to ¼ dearer, December 82. Provisions results varied from 10 cents setback to 12 cents bulge.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Ease Off Slightly Except Oils and Utilities; Dollar Declines.

New York, Oct. 20.—Stocks and bonds acted a little wearier of it all and the tone was a shade easier. Closing prices for stocks were irregularly lower, except among the utilities and oils. Sales volume was smaller at around 1,700,000 shares. December wheat lost an eighth of a cent at 114⅝ cents a bushel.

Stocks were the toughest in the oil and utility sections. Irregularity and downright weakness was much more pronounced elsewhere. Utility price gains were moderate, but the sales volume was large and several issues reached new high ground. Consolidated Edison, usually a conservative performer, rose more than a point to the best point in two years. Water Works and North American expanded by large fractions. The Standard group and Seaboard were the best of the oils.

Shopping Round.

Losses among the railroad shares ranged from a fraction to more than two points. Santa Fe, Nickel Plate, Delaware & Hudson and Union Pacific retreated the furthest. Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Pacific held firm. Steel share traders shopped round. Some of the independents rose sharply. U. S. Steel and Bethlehem lost a point each. Estimates of Steel's earnings were not especially illuminating. It has been taken for granted that the profits would be as good or better than those of second quarter.

Metal shares weakened and motors were quoted lower. Chrysler couldn't hold an early rise. Groups frankly heavy in tone were the amusements, rail equipments, motor accessories, foods, tobaccos and rubbers. Mail orders were mixed, as were the farm implements. Specialties drew fire. Fajardo Sugar was bid up nearly 4 points to a new high price for the present shares. Sharon Steel turned active and rose nearly 2 points. Matheison Alkali, Pittsburgh Steel preferred, Otis Elevator, Real Silk preferred, Sloss Sheffield common and preferred advanced 1 to 6 points.

Currency Management.

Foreign exchanges were not disturbed by the apparent hastening of the fall of the Spanish government and the renewed threats of Russia. No great attention either was paid to the earmarking at the Federal Reserve Bank of a large amount of gold. Assuming that the metal was intended for export, no considerable liquidation of foreign investment in our markets has yet appeared.

More than likely it was supposed that the gold changes were connected with foreign exchange controls, the operations of which, it is taken for granted, will be fairly well covered, and perhaps even overlaid with a little hocus-pocus. At any rate the controls are functioning well. Dollars were weak against most currencies today, and largely because it was so willed by the authorities.

While markets walk up and down the sidelines or hunch down on the benches, the public talks increasingly of politics and pays less attention than usual to trade developments and to foreign affairs. Oddly enough the shorter the time before election the less nervousness traders and investors seem to show. It may be that holder of stocks cannot for long continue in a state of suspense, and for that reason welcome an excuse to believe that, regardless of the election outcome, the stock market will get along all right for awhile.

Unquestionably every one would like to believe that, and most people now are saying it, although a short time ago they were fearful or jubilant over the prospects, depending on their political and market views. A small body of opinion still maintains that the election of Gov. Landon might have a temporary deflationary effect, on the supposition that traders would assume an early reduction in Government expenditures. On the other hand, it is difficult to find any one who fears for the longer term future in investments in case of a conservative victory.

Material Causes.

Wall Street speculators who are inclined to look for an immediate boomlet in stock prices in case of the return of President Roosevelt to power base their hopes on the beginning in dead earnest of inflation. That view is now being tempered a bit by the family hints that the first act of the New Dealers might be to revive the NRA, which every one now knows was frankly deflationary in its effects and would again put a brake on business recovery. Those on the middle ground think business recovery is too robust to be easily stopped, principally because it has its roots in natural causes and not in the New Deal's planned recovery. Such effect as Government spending has had has been seen mainly in a few quick consumption industries.

The feature of the statements of reporting banks in 101 leading cities for the week ended October 14 was a rise of $43,000,000 in commercial and miscellaneous loans. This was foreshadowed by the figures of New York City banks last Thursday when they reported a $26,000,000 expansion. The aggregate of such loans is now above the $4,000,000,000 figure for the first time in several years and is $737,000,000 higher than the figure of last February 25. The expansion in these borrowings came despite an all round reduction in other loans and investments, particularly securities loans and holdings of government securities, the latter declining $36,000,000. Aggregate holdings of government direct obligations by member banks which report weekly are now about $200,000,000 under July 1 levels. Of the $36,000,000 decrease in holdings of Government securities last week $21,000,000 were disposed of by New York banks.

Deposits Rise.

While loans and investments generally were falling, deposits of individuals and firms rose $63,000,000 and balance of domestic banks increased $130,000,000. The contra item, balances with domestic banks, increased $87,000,000. The net result was a rise of $131,000,000 in reserves and a $20,000,000 increase in cash in the banks' own vaults, which does not count as reserve until deposited in the Reserve banks. Expansion in deposits was mainly in interior sections of the country; here the banks reported a decrease of $42,000,000.

Standard Oil.

Standard Oil reached 66 for the first time in several months and most members of the oil group were strong. The heavy buying season for gasoline is over and a price reduction was announced this morning by Standard, but earnings this year are known to be good. Another factor with regard to Standard is the new undistributed earnings tax. Traditionally a conservative dividend payer, Standard this year may have to pay more than otherwise would be the case.

More Goods, Less Gold Come From Abroad

New York, Oct. 20.—Shipments of merchandise, gold and silver to the United States during the first eight months provided foreign countries with $2,284,000,000 this year as against $2,343,000,000 last year for the purchase of American merchandise and securities, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. Smaller gold shipments accounted entirely for the reduction in funds this year. Shipments of merchandise to the United States rose from $1,340,000,000 in 1935 to $1,552,000,000 in 1936.

Although total foreign funds available for use in the American markets were smaller than last year, the decrease was more than offset by curtailment in the purchase of American securities and in the financing of other invisible items by foreigners. Funds used for invisible items amounted to only $772,000,000 this year as against $974,000,000 last year. Foreigners thus spent more money for American merchandise than a year ago.

Exports of merchandise from the United States during the first eight months were valued at $1,512,000,000 this year as against $1,369,000,000 last year, an increase of 10.4 per cent. The maintenance of this increase during the remainder of the year would result in annual exports of $2,520,000,000 in 1936. This would thus be the fourth consecutive year of expansion with exports in 1936 running 56.4 per cent above the depression's low of $1,611,000,000 in 1932. At the same time exports of $2,520,000,000 in 1936 would be less than half the predepression figure of $5,241,000,000 in 1929.

Farm Income Over Last Year In Four Areas

8 Months' Sales This Year 4.472 Billion; in 1935 Period 3.775 Billion.

By the Associated Press.

Larger cash income from the sale of principal farm products in August, compared with the same month last year, was reported yesterday for four of the six regions of the country by the Department of Agriculture.

The report said that received by farmers for their products in August this year had increased 30 per cent in West Central States, 27 per cent in East North Central States, 26 per cent in North Atlantic States and 17 per cent in Western States.

The decreases were 7 per cent in South Atlantic States and 5 per cent in South Central States. Smaller marketings of cotton and tobacco caused the declines, the department said.

States showing a decrease this August compared with a year ago included North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

The national income from sale of farm products was reported at $637,000,000 this August and $568,000,000 in August 1935. National income from sale of farm products for the first eight months this year was estimated at $4,472,000,000 as compared with $3,775,000,000 for the similar period last year.

Only Kentucky and South Carolina of the 48 States showed a smaller cash income for the first eight months of this year compared with last. The tabulations did not include Federal farm benefit payments of $10,541,000 in August this year and $44,235,000 for the month in 1935.

Supply of Cars Ample to Carry Rising Freight

No Shortage Yet Although Loadings Are Largest in Five Years.

Despite the fact the volume of freight traffic, measured in cars loaded with revenue freight, has been greater so far this year than in any corresponding period since 1931, the demand for freight cars has been met with no actual shortages on any consequence, although the demand for certain special type of cars, in some instances, has been close to the supply, the Car Service Division of the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday.

The Car Service Division believes that the shipping public can be assured of the ability of the railroads to fill the demands for freight cars during the remainder of the year without car shortage.

Carloadings reported by the individual railroads to the association normally reach their peak in September or October. The loadings for the week ended October 10, this year, totaled 820,195, which exceeded the previous week by about 1,000 cars and was greater than any preceding week since November 8, 1930. It is to be expected that loadings from now until the end of the year will follow the usual seasonal downward trend to the low point usually reached at the holiday period.

Lake navigation closes from a month to six weeks hence and the coal cars now engaged in that service will be available for general coal loading. The supply of coal and gondola cars will also be built up as there is curtailment or cessation of construction and road building activities with the approach of cold weather.

Text of Gov. Landon's Los Angeles Speech Urging Nation to Support Constitution

Six weeks ago I went to the East Coast—to Maine, on the eve of the State election. My purpose was to tell the people there how serious are the issues that face us.

Tonight, on the eve of the national election, I come to the Pacific Coast for the same purpose. I come to talk about a serious issue—abuse of the power of Government, and its threat to our liberty and our independence.

The Pacific Coast was settled by men and women who possessed the pioneer qualities of self-reliance, courage and love of independence. Those who followed possessed the same qualities. In three-quarters of a century you have created on the shores of the Pacific a new economic empire. This has been done, and could only have been done, under a Government which guaranteed economic freedom, political freedom and personal liberty.

For a century and a half, this freedom and this liberty have been protected under the charter of our Government, the Constitution.

New Theory Attacked.

Today the usefulness of our Constitution is being questioned. We have been told that it is out of date, that the very freedom it guarantees us is the cause of our present trouble. In my opinion, this reasoning is tragically wrong. The planned society, which is the alternative to representative government, is spreading rapidly throughout the world. We know only too well how it has worked out in actual practice. It has destroyed freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion. It has robbed the people of those great guarantees of personal liberty and human rights that we enjoy under the American system. I do not believe that a temporary depression is adequate reason for changing our whole form of government.

The men who drew our Constitution knew and feared the tyranny of a centralized government over which they had no control. They were determined that in the creation of this new government that tyranny could never exist. So effective was their work that for a century and a half the American people have not known the meaning of tyranny. We have forgotten that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Too many are inclined to laugh at this truth as a "horse and buggy" 'bromide.

Warns of Dangers.

We have forgotten that once the censor forbids us to speak as we please, once the Government forbids us to worship as we wish, once the jailor enters our homes without warrant—it will be too late to protest. We will no longer be free.

George Washington warned us that we should ever be on our guard against attempts to "undermine what cannot be directly overthrown." Let us examine the record of the last four years in the light of that warning.

This Administration came into power at a time of great national crisis. Unusual powers were granted to the Chief Executive. But when the crisis was over, the Administration refused to give up its extraordinary powers. Instead, it asked for more. It seemed obsessed with the idea that it had a mandate to direct and control American business, American agriculture and American life.

They tried to tell our farmers how much they could plant and how much they could not plant.

They tried to tell our business men how much they could produce and under what conditions they could run their business.

They tried to tell labor who could and who could not represent them in negotiations with their employers.

Sees Liberty Menaced.

Was this an undermining of our liberties? I think so. And the proof of it is, so many of our fellow citizens rebelled at these tactics that the administration was forced to abandon the substerfuge of voluntary co-operation. It cracked the whip on those individuals who refused to be led like sheep. It resented any criticism which recalled what American initiative and free enterprise had done for the country. And when the Supreme Court declared its methods unconstitutional, the administration actually attempted to bring the Supreme Court into disrepute.

Spokesmen of the Administration made stump speeches and issued statements condemning the court. They ridiculed the justices. They said they were obstructing progress.

Even the President joined in this undermining attack on men who were only doing their duty—men sworn to uphold the constitution of the United States. The President predicted disaster if his plans were held unconstitutional. They were held unconstitutional. Now he claims credit for the improvement that followed. He says, "we planned it that way."

Fortunately the Supreme Court had the prestige and the integrity to withstand the abuses that were heaped upon it. But for the private citizen it was not so easy. No private citizen likes to be held up to public scorn by public officials. His freedom to criticize—that is, his freedom of speech—is bought at a high price indeed when the integrity of his motives is questioned by his government. It is a little wonder that many fell into line.

For those who refused to be silenced by these methods, other intimidations were devised. Business men with Government contracts were threatened with cancellation. Business men who wanted contracts were warned that they must toe the line. All business men, under the Blue Eagle, were faced with arbitrary enforcements of arbitrary interpretations of arbitrary rules—rules not made by Congress but by some appointed subordinate sitting at a desk in Washington and fumbling with the business of the country.

But the irony of this abuse of the power of Government was that the small businessman, in whose name the Government had supposedly acted, was the very man who suffered most. He could not afford to keep a lawyer in Washington to inform him of the latest rules and regulations. He could not compete under the monopolistic conditions laid down by the codes.

In short, the whole plan acted as a millstone around the neck of the little fellow, and what did it do for the big fellow? It had the effect of strengthening his position—it fostered monopoly. In this it was a forerunner of this Administration's most recent tax bill—the bill which makes it virtually impossible for the little fellow to accumulate the reserves necessary to his protection and growth.

Maine Speech Recalled.

As I said at Portland, Me., on September 12:

"Government must protect the average man against aggressive exploitation by the strong * * * Unless Government is constantly on guard to defend competition against abuses, a free enterprise system tends to become an entanglement of vested interests and rigid prices.

"But the solution is not to abandon a free enterprise system for a system of Government monopolies.

"The solution is to free the forces of competition—to stamp out unfair trade practices and monopoly. This will allow the American people to resume their steady march of progress."

One way of stamping out unfair trade practices and monopoly was pointed out by Justice Cardozo in his concurring opinion in the NRA decision of the Supreme Court. The learned justice said:

"If codes of fair competition are codes eliminating 'unfair' methods of competition ascertained upon inquiry to prevail in one industry or another, there is no unlawful delegation of legislative functions when the President is directed to inquire into such practices and denounce them when discovered. For many years a like power has been committed to the Federal Trade Commission with the approval of this court in a long series of decisions."

Different Under NRA.

This is a very different method, as the learned justice also said, from that provided in the NRA codes, which were "delegation running riot."

Now let us consider the power of the public purse and how it can be abused.

The present Administration has spent $25,000,000,000. Of this enormous sums, billions have been spent by the Chief Executive, practically at his own discretion.

The present Chief Executive has had placed at his disposal eight times as much discretionary spending power as was given to all of his predecessors together in 143 years of our history.

The power that this has given to the Chief Executive cannot be calculated, and he has not hesitated to use it. Nor has he hesitated to take the next step in tampering with the basic principles of democracy. The executive branch is now refusing to make public the salaries paid and the names on the pay rolls under blank check appropriations. There is also unmistakable evidence that they have been used to prevent criticism by officials and representatives of local communities. There is unmistakable evidence that these funds have been used in an attempt to prevent freedom of choice at the polls. Nothing can be more shameful than the way some of these Federal funds have been distributed. Special groups and special localities have been singled out solely for political reasons.

Relief Abuse Cited.

Relief funds have been used in an attempt to force our less fortunate fellow citizens to vote for the return of this Administration to power.

Does this undermine our freedom? I think so. We all know that under this Administration, the managers of relief have played favorites—they have developed two classes of relief, common and preferred.

Let us not forget that abuse of the Government's right to spend leads to abuse of the Government's right to borrow. Abuse of the right to borrow is the first step to inflation and is a direct threat to all those who by thrift have accumulated savings.

An inherent part of Government's power over the purse is the power to tax. When abused, it becomes the power to destroy. Many of the so-called revenue measures passed under this Administration were not designed to raise revenue. They were designed to force the nonconformer into line, to threaten him with destructive and punitive taxation. They were an attempt to accomplish indirectly by taxation what could not be accomplished directly under the Constitution.

"Fishing" Assailed.

The powers I have been discussing are for the most part clearly defined by the Constitution or decisions of the Supreme Court. But there is one that has never been clearly defined. I speak of the Congressional power of investigation. But even if the letter of the law is not clear, the spirit of the Constitution is unmistakable.

No legal hair splitting can hide the difference between an investigating committee that is trying to get information useful in the framing of laws and an investigating committee that is indulging in a fishing expedition into the private affairs of private citizens—a committee that is out to get the crooks and a committee that is out to get the critics.

In the last three and one-half years, Congressional investigations have budded and blossomed in unusually rank profusion. No soil of real or fancied wrongdoing is so poor that it will not sprout a full-fledged investigation. They are too often carried on in flagrant disregard of the rights of citizens.

Investigation All Powerful.

Witnesses have been brought before investigating committees and treated as criminals at the bar of justice. But with this difference: their rights have not been respected as in our courts of law. For many of these investigating committees have acted as prosecuting attorney, jury and judge combined. The sentence they pass has too frequently been a reputation unjustly smeared before the public. Is this an undermining of our freedom? You know it is. It is a direct violation of the spirit of the Bill of Rights.

One Congressional investigation, characterized as a fishing expedition, openly and flagrantly violated the constitutional restriction against unreasonable search and seizure. Great masses of private correspondence were taken. Reports state that the papers seized have been used for purposes having no connection with the alleged subject matter of the investigation.

And recently a Congressional investigation has been carried on for what seems to be purely political ends. In this case the thinly veiled purpose apparently was to discredit a political movement which the controlling party wished to crush.

It is obvious that all investigations are not an abuse of the power of government.

Condemns Wrong Use.

But the existence of the power is no justification for its abuse. And abuse of it is contrary to the spirit of the Bill of Rights, even if it does not transgress the letter of the law. We must look to the spirit of the Constitution if it is to fulfill its great purpose in protecting this people. We must look to the leadership and responsibility of Congress to see this spirit remains a living force. In the last three and a half years this administration led us far from the principles of the American form of government. That this has been deliberate there can be no doubt. A trusted official and close adviser of the Chief Executive has expressed in precise terms the processes this Administration is following. He used these words:

"We begin with small unnoted changes and end by not being able to resist vast and spectacular ones—at which time our systems of theory tumble unwept into the grave."

We have every reason to believe that this Administration would consider a return to power an indorsement of its policies. If we are to preserve our American form of government, this Administration must be defeated.

Our only safety is to return to our Constitution. For our Constitution was the product of long experience in the practice of government. It reflects centuries of striving and of suffering by a people determined to be free.

When Washington first took his oath of office, the Colony of Virginia already had 182 years of history, and the Colony of Massachusetts 169. Indeed the greater number of the colonies were older than our Government now is, under our Constitution. The framers of our Constitution were practical men. They were stern realists who knew the pleasing guises in which tyranny creeps upon the people. And they knew the bonds of despotism. Schooled in each, they saw through and behind the one. They foresaw and forestalled the other.

Yet even these men with all their personal knowledge of tyranny and its methods, with all their love for freedom, with all their experience in practical legislation, were unable to frame a document satisfactory to the people. In spite of all the safeguards against tyranny which they inserted in the body of the Constitution, the people of the 13 original States were not satisfied. More safeguards were demanded.

Rights Guaranteed.

These additional safeguards are contained in the first ten amendments which are commonly called the Bill of Rights. They guarantee to the individual freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, freedom from unlawful search and seizure. They guarantee the right to a trial by jury. And last, but by no means least, they reserve to the people and to the States, all powers not specifically granted to the Federal Government.

The authors of our Constitution spoke of and for the people. They were not a group of unschooled experimenters. They were not anxious to break away from tradition. They were not anxious to set up, as President Roosevelt boasts he has, new instruments of public power that could be used to shackle the liberties of the people and enslave the public.

Their anxiety was for the people and only for the people!

If we would maintain our Nation, if we would keep it free, if we would set an example before the world of tolerance and peace, we must brook no tampering with our freedom.

Urges Constant Vigil.

Let us never forget what freedom means. Let us never forget that without freedom there can be no secuity. Let us never forget the high purpose in which this Nation was founded and for which we still must strive. Let us remember there is a larger Americanism than the little blueprints of a planned economy, than the disciplined citizenry which this Administation would like to foist upon us.

Its foundation is just government—a govenment that does not abuse its powers at the expense of the liberty and independence of the citizens. This larger Americanism was described by a great and fearless President, Theodore Roosevelt. Let me close by reading what he had to say:

"The larger Americanism demands that we refuse to be sundered from one another along lines of class or creed or section or national origin; that we judge each American on his merits as a man; that we work for the well-being of our bodily selves, but also for the well-being of our spiritual selves; that we consider safety, but that we put honor and duty ahead of safety. Only thus shall we stand erect before the world, high of heart, master of our own souls, fit to be the fathers of a race of free men who shall make and who shall keep this land all that it seemed to the prophetic vision of the mighty men who founded it and the mighty men who saved it."
